Phase One of Alumni self-study completed

Is the Alumni Association of Queen's University geared to meet the challenge of a rapidly expanding constituency in a world of changing values?

This was the question which prompted an examination into the aims and purposes of the Association and a re-evaluation of the philosophy behind the operations.

Started in 1968, Phase One of the survey has been completed. Many of the recommendations were acted upon as soon as they were brought forward, and the others are being implemented.

The study was initiated at a time when there might have been some grounds for complacency. The University had a prime asset in what is known as the Queen's spirit and of which the Association might logically be regarded as the custodian. There were 40 branches, most of which had active and diversified programs. There was an alumni magazine which was generally well received. There was a good program of class reunions. There was a well-established Alumni Fund which had been recognized with an American Alumni Council certificate for sustained performance.

Revitalizing the Fund

As a matter of fact it was the Alumni Fund which prompted the survey. The Alumni Directors had expressed concern that operating expenses were accelerating while income from the Alumni Fund was relatively static. Although it was generally recognized that the Fund represented only part of the alumni financial and other support for the University, it was agreed to ask the Alumni Fund Committee to look into a revitalization of its program.

The Committee, headed by W.G. Cunningham, outlined how alumni support might be improved. All recommendations were predicated on greater participation of branches, which suggested greater attention to the direction and encouragement of existing branches and the formation of others where warranted. The recommendation that a study be made of the entire structure of the Association was approved, and a steering committee was appointed.

The Perrin Report

The first step was an invitation to the presidents or their representatives to a meeting at Queen's. Forty-one attended; after a two-day session, the consensus: office administration—requires assistance at the executive level, and computerized records; branches—need direction and support; Alumni Fund—time opportune for additional techniques; relationships with the University—excellent; Review—might be more topical and less reminiscent; reunions—a good track record; the Queen's tradition—needs careful nourishment; alumni-student relationships—requires improved communications.

Sub-committees were formed to conduct detailed studies of these areas. The report of the committee on office administration, under the chairmanship of George E. Perrin, was given top priority.

The Perrin report was brought before the Board at the spring meeting in 1969, and proposed a new set-up headed by a Director of Alumni Affairs, assisted by four new persons, namely, a Field Secretary, Alumni Fund Director, editor of the Review, and a Reunion-Records Secretary. All but the last have been appointed.

The report also recommended computerization of the Alumni records, for which the preparatory work has now been completed. When the money is available for conversion, the transfer can be made smoothly and with a minimum of disruption.

Recommendations made by the other committees have been acted upon and include a change in the format and policies of the Review, formation of a widely representative Alumni Fund Committee, direct representation of the Alumni Board of Directors on the University Board of Trustees; closer liaison with the student body, and a detailed schedule for the preparation of reunions.

How to Stay Viable

The report of the entire survey was approved at the October 1972 meeting of the Board of Directors. There was agreement that it should be looked upon as a progress report, inasmuch as the survey should never be regarded as completed. If the Association is to continue as a viable force, then it must be continually seeking new ways to serve the University more efficiently.

Copies of the complete report may be obtained on request from the Alumni Office.

LEADERSHIP

By Catherine M. Perkins

Last May, when Queen's M.B.A. (Master of Business Administration) class of 1973 wrote to welcome the incoming members of M B A '74, they heaped praise on the school they had chosen and mentioned that "courses are regularly reviewed, updated and revised to meet current needs; the faculty is first-rate and accessible."

A 1962 graduate of the first M B A class looking into the program after even ten years might find that their successors had somewhat understated the case. The old school tie is there unmistakably, but if one had to design a new symbol for the program now under development, it might well be a computer clutching a brace of quantitative and qualitative methodologies, rampant on a field of corporate planning models and matrix organizational designs.

After the traditional emphasis in business schools of the '50's and '60's, even the terminology, let alone the curriculum, seems more complex and technical.

What's really happening? Prof.

Norman B. MacIntosh, chairman of the M B A program, says the School has been developing "a strategy for leading the field of university education for management."

Dean Rich Hand says that business schools, like generations of computers, have been evolving over a relatively short period of time. "At Queen's, we've been narrowing the gap between theory and practice." The greatest philosophical change in business schools, he says, has come from the efforts to tie management processes into the mainstream of intellectual life in the basic disciplines, in effect underpinning and improving the practice.

"It has been realized only recently in universities," he points out, "that basic disciplines have relevance in training for management just as they do in other professions, such as medicine and engineering." (For more on the philosophy at Queen's, see page 10.)

The knowledge explosion of recent years has been quite remarkable, he adds. To fulfill more of its promise, the art-science of management was "waiting on the social sciences," and the way these have affected Queen's may be traced through three major approaches in the School's 54 years.

For almost half that time, business studies were emerging from their dominant partners in economics and politics, with accounting as the strongest offspring. By 1950 the approach was oriented toward the more traditional business functions and was characterized by fragmentation and institutional descriptions in the areas of marketing, production, finance, labour relations and personnel. As conceptual knowledge and analytical tools developed quickly, the organization's policy decisions and behaviour became the more dominant theme with the advent of the '70's. Queen's now is evolving into its third approach to business studies.

This latest adaptation, according to Professor MacIntosh, focuses on hard-nosed analysis of organizations' policy decisions. This analysis uses the basic empirical skills of economics, mathematics, statistics, computing and behavioural sciences in its approach to applied problems (see page 10).

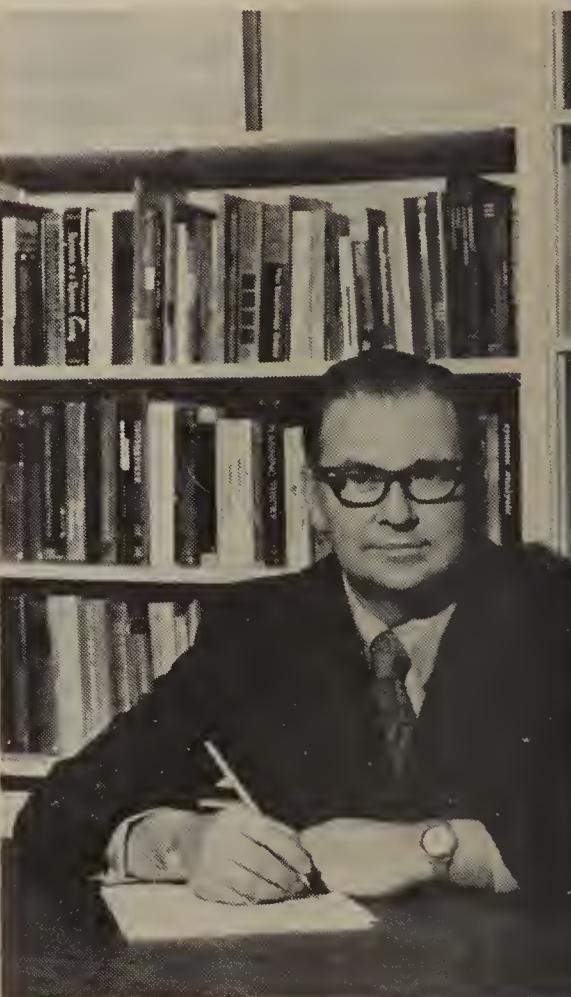

To attack multi-faceted problems effectively, some of the limitations of partial viewpoints must be avoided. "Synthesis is crucial for decision-making in the real world," says the Dean. "To make Queen's program coherent, the School has mustered a core of scholars who can work together with a measure of mutual understanding, reinforcing each other's specialization and building a common conception of educational purposes in this field."

The resultant "hiring strategy" (see page 8) appears to have revitalized the nature of research in the School, and directed it toward applied problems using research teams. For example, Professors Fullerton, Petersen, Cloutier and Taylor set out to model the network of bulk commodity flows in Canada's transportation system. Intermodal transport statistics hadn't been collected systematically in Canada. So Prof. L.T. Graham set about the task of assembling a transportation data bank, using a classification system that has since been adopted by Statistics Canada. Professors Neave, Petersen and Scott began significant work on corporate planning models, using a dynamic programming approach. Meanwhile, Prof. R.E. Turner joined the transport research team to work on a demand model of shippers' choices among alternative modes.

The School's involvement with the multidisciplinary Canadian Institute for Guided Ground Transport has been well publicized, particularly in connection with the proposed scheme to deliver Arctic oil and gas to southern markets via an unusual railway-pipeline combination, studied by Prof. Cecil Law and his colleagues.

Professors Bob Crandall, Mike Gibbins and Norm MacIntosh are incorporating some of their research findings on management information systems into a new course in the School's Continuing Education program.

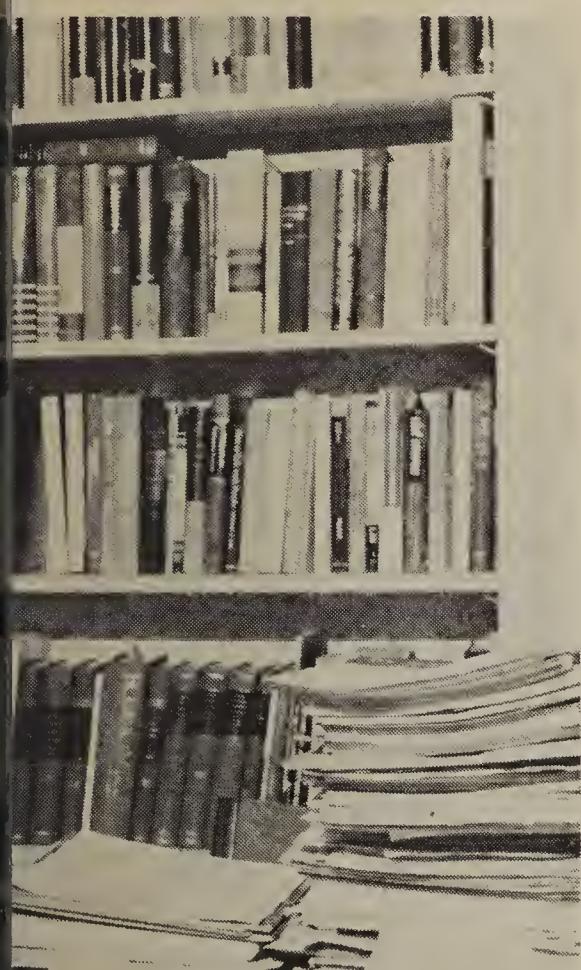

Dean Rich Hand

Dunning Hall on University Ave. is current home of the School of Business and its graduate MBA program.

"It's hardly surprising that the job market for Queen's M.B.A. grads is brisk."

Other projects involve capital markets, interest rates, advertising effects in elections, capital budgeting in government, R and D expenditures, the Canada-U.S. auto pact, forecasting accuracy, risk attitudes, manpower reallocation, the Ontario Labour Court, organizational development experiments, model-building in health systems and criminal justice systems, organization of sales effort, market planning, budget simulation, growth of small enterprises and the impact of tax reforms. Such research efforts often become teaching tools in the M.B.A. program, keeping it abreast of the times and inculcating the students with a spirit of systematic inquiry.

Prof. Hank Helmers will head a team of graduate students in research and consultation work with small business in eastern Ontario this summer.

"We're capturing the future"

"The future will belong to the penetrating question-asker in a world surfeited with data," Dean Hand comments.

It's a common phenomenon, says Norman MacIntosh, to see students blossom in their own way here. "Important parts of themselves emerge. There's a range of jobs after graduation to suit most personalities, and so they have scope to grow inside the program and not just become disciples." He's noticeably proud of the calibre of students who come to Queen's for their M.B.A. and points to an enviable record of success in prestigious national competitions. Of six Bronfman awards offered in 18 programs this year, for example, Queen's students won three.

It's hardly surprising that the job situation for Queen's M.B.A. grads is "brisk." Jim Leech, president of the graduating class, had had 17 job offers by December, and all this year's candidates have a good choice. There appears to be a trend for upcoming grads to opt for bigger challenges in smaller, somewhat pioneering companies.

As always, it's the students who are the measure of success and the most significant reflection of Queen's nature and goals. And that's why it's cheering for the faculty to receive a letter such as came recently from Larry Kennedy, M.B.A. '72, writing from Harris and Partners Ltd. in Toronto's Commerce Court. "I believe," he wrote, "that the M.B.A. program at Queen's has helped me to get started in a position which offers growth, where learning continues, self-fulfilment is possible and the options are open-ended."

HOW THE FACULTY TEAM WAS PUT TOGETHER

"The world seems to be calling out for help with applied problems that often transcend any one discipline." That's an observation Dean Hand makes when speaking of the pool of diverse intellectual competences represented among the current 40 faculty members of the School of Business. Most of them are young, with a judicious mixture of viewpoints and experiences. Much of the doctoral work before 1960 failed to reflect the changing and future character of management in complex organizations, he adds. Canadian universities have lagged behind society's needs in this domain.

In its recent hiring, the School has recognized the value of overlapping faculty research and teaching interests. "We've attempted to capture the future," as the Dean puts it. "We've tried to attract to Queen's the very best minds committed to study in this field and to retain them long enough to develop a certain philosophical consistency which fosters some convergences in research efforts and a lively and intimate teaching climate not likely in larger schools."

The professors pictured here represent a sample of the "new" faculty and some of their activities, frequently shared by students who have similar interests.

NORMAN MACINTOSH, with H. and Y. Tsurumi, is looking at the use of applied econometrics in strategic planning for firms and has published an attention-getting study of Canada Packers.

TED NEAVE's specialty is corporate planning models and their use in teaching and research. He is the only Canadian editor of Management Science, "a great honour for the School."

JOHN FORSYTH, Arts '58, helped the new Ministry of the Environment organize its financial resources and allocations in the light of the "non-profit" nature of its returns.

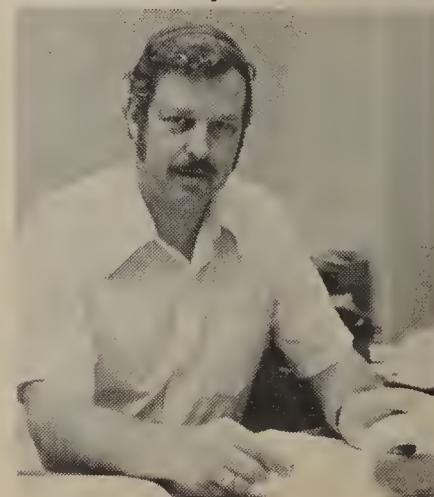

BILL MIKLAS, Arts '63, left, is working on statistical problems involved with data gaps—and coaching the Golden Gaels. MERV DAUB, Com. '66, a former footballer, is assessing the accuracy of short and intermediate-term forecasts.

KRIS PALDA, Com. '56, is a U.S.-trained marketing man currently estimating the effects of advertising on the last Quebec election.

JIM NININGER is looking at the problems of change in organizational development, and particularly at turnover of high-talent manpower.

WHY DO THEY WANT AN MBA?

What reasons do candidates give these days for deciding to pursue a graduate business degree? They are often downright pragmatic, but occasionally almost idealistic.

"My undergraduate degree is a B.Sc. in Physics," reported one young man; "I wanted a Master's degree with some training in Capitalism."

"I'm interested in a career in politics," wrote another. "I felt that a business degree combined with a law degree would provide a sound background."

"Today an MBA degree seems to be widely accepted as an indication of later success in a chosen career," read one answer. "An MBA widens the field of jobs which I shall have open to me."

Others interviewed cited "job mobility and scope," "a better job," "money and power plus a wish to avoid mental stagnation," "freedom from a career of nine-to-five desk jobs," "future flexibility" and "a wider variety of job opportunities, probably all my life." One man said his principal reason was "to equip myself with enough knowledge to pursue a field where I can earn a comfortable living as well as contribute to society."

Several of the MBA students have spent a few years working since getting their undergraduate degree and have noted the difference that managerial knowledge and skills can make in job choices, promotions, and career satisfaction. Of these candidates, many are engineers who figured that their area of specialization would narrow their choices over the years.

"I noticed that management positions are usually filled by someone with a Master's degree," said one, "and I figure the trend will continue."

In recent years, every class has had a few French-speaking Canadian students who elected to study business at an English-speaking university and who heard good reports of Queen's congeniality and professionalism from predecessors. In almost every class, too, there are a few students from developing nations studying international business and finance, and working on the basis, as one Kenyan puts it, "that my country needs more trained and educated executives at its present stage."

Though it isn't often stated in bald terms, starting salaries for MBA graduates are a powerful incentive. In fact, they're the highest salaries at the master's level, according to a recent study by the Association of MBA's. The average annual starting salary for 1972 was $12,910, or $1,075 per month. Those who had a technical (science) degree before taking their MBA were offered slightly higher salaries than those with non-technical backgrounds (arts, social sciences, commerce, etc.), although there is far more demand for the non-technical grads.

Where do most of the MBA's go? Those with science-plus-MBA degrees find most opportunity in accounting; chemicals and drugs; petroleum and allied products; banking, finance and insurance; and electronics and instruments.

Non-technical MBA's are most in demand in accounting (particularly public accounting); banking, finance and insurance; merchandising (wholesale and retail) and related services; automotive and mechanical equipment; the chemical and drug industries; and government.

WHY QUEEN'S?

For 1972-73, the School of Business registered 51 of the 378 men and women who applied for the MBA program. Believing that the opinion of a bird in the hand is worth at least two from the bush, the School asked incoming students why they had chosen Queen's over other schools.

A big factor was the recommendation of previous students and, in cases where candidates were acquiring experience in business and industry, the recommendations of employers. Another factor was what many students called the School's "very good name" and what another called its "high-standing reputation among business schools."

"Everyone I consulted mentioned Queen's among the top three schools," said one student. Queen's chief Canadian rivals are Western, U.B.C., McGill, and Toronto. International competitors include Carnegie, Harvard, Chicago and M.I.T.

"I'm interested in data handling, information processing, etc.," said one practical person, "and Queen's has an excellent computer system."

"The Queen's calendar suggested the most rigorous, interesting array of courses," capsulized one satisfied customer. Fifteen members of the class specifically mentioned the good image they had of Queen's and Kingston, some adding that the University is in a prime employment area. Queen's was considered superior to other schools in the quantitative content of the courses, and many approved of the good staff-student ratio. There are 40 faculty members in the School of Business with about 105 graduate students enrolled in the two-year program and about 600 undergraduates.

As a well-seasoned university, Queen's has developed its own balanced approach to management studies, not following any of the well-known models too closely. The approach emphasizes the disciplined analysis of applied problems and decisions in the complex organizations of our changing world.

For example, at Western and Harvard the case method is mainly used as an approach to teaching and research. Dean R.J. Hand considers it somewhat divorced from the growing social science knowledge base which is strengthening organizational and managerial practice throughout the world. At Chicago, on the other hand, business administration is studied largely at the level of general theoretical concepts without much attention to real-world applications in particular cases, according to Dean Hand.

"At Queen's," he says, "we try to recognize the way professional clinical practice, whether medicine, engineering or management, improves when underpinned by new knowledge and techniques from various disciplines. These integrations and applications of new knowledge are the essence of modern management studies."

"There are many interplays to be worked out — between inductive and deductive, breadth and depth, general and particular, knowledge and skill, technical and human, theory and practice, quantitative and qualitative, scientific and artistic or empirical, contemporary and future.

"These balances are the significant thing, not one extreme or the other," the Dean emphasizes, "even though it may result in about half of the students being displeased with the particular balance struck by the faculty about half of the time."

He must be doing something right. Of the 51 students signed up for their first MBA year, 37 were also accepted at other schools of business (including M.I.T. and the Carnegie-Mellon Institute) and chose Queen's when it came down to the wire.

"As far as I can see," summed up one satisfied student, "Queen's is a happy mix between the classical and swinging approach."

THE CHALLENGES OF CONTINUING EDUCATION

A group of businessmen on leave from their companies for a summer course pass under the graceful gate between Dunning Hall (auditorium in background) and Richardson Hall.

The area of continuing education is not a new one for the School of Business, but Dean Hand emphasizes that this is no time to rest on precedents. "Queen's must reach out if it's to retain its national character," he says.

Extension courses in business date back to banking and accounting courses around the turn of the century. "Then there was a middle period," the Dean recalls, "when the School often planned a conference or course by introspection and simply prayed that it would catch on. But out of experience, we've now identified long-range goals for continuing education for the School. We need to stay in touch with people for longer periods; we need to develop courses that integrate better with the academic interests of our faculty members and those in the community; and we need to build a consortium of organizations and managers that will foster more lasting relationships between industry and the School and help us to design more meaningful courses."

The School derives invaluable benefits from the relationships created through a sound continuing education program. "We gain access to relevant people, data and problems," Prof. Jim Nininger, chairman of the Continuing Education program, points out. "Our consortium of 'outside' people leads to employment opportunities for both graduates and summer job hunters. And lately we seem to be making some headway with our efforts to encourage companies to grant short sabbatical leaves to their employees seeking renewal and updating.

"I'm looking forward," he adds, "to the completion of the Donald Gordon Centre for Continuing Education at Roselawn, so that Queen's can provide a near-perfect setting and, for example, enjoy the stimulus of having this country's senior financial experts together at an annual seminar. I'm sure that we can make a responsible contribution to Canadian Society by this means."

HOW THE ALUMNI WILL HELP

MBA policy plotters have taken a look at constructive student criticisms and decided to make a few changes in their approach to future applicants. . . changes that involve alumni.

The situation is this: There were 1,975 inquiries last year (about 500 of them from foreign students and the same number from poster tear-offs). These boiled down to 378 applications, 179 acceptances and eventually 51 registrations. Prof. Norman Macintosh, chairman of the MBA program, is aiming at 275 acceptances for 1973-74. And School of Business alumni may play a crucial role in plans to meet that goal.

MBA graduates are being contacted individually by Dean R.J. Hand and asked to help recruit the best students in their areas. Names of applicants in their city or district will be supplied by the School to its grads; wherever feasible, the applicants will be invited to alumni meetings, and then grads will be asked to meet with the young men and women on a one-to-one basis, on the job, over lunch, etc.

This new follow-up tactic grew out of comments made on a registration questionnaire last fall. Several new students commented that other schools had kept in regular contact between initial application and final acceptance, either through letters or brochures, and that this correspondence had made them "feel wanted." Several suggested that a personal interview would probably influence applicants in favour of Queen's.

In the fall, when the School of Business circulated a letter to final-year students inviting inquiries about the MBA program, women on the list received a little something extra—an arty folder entitled, "Woman—What will you do?", prepared by the Graduate Business Admission Council at Princeton University.

"MBA pamphlet 'token' to women," snapped the Queen's Journal. "Several women at Queen's have expressed dissatisfaction with this pamphlet," ran the feature. "Some feel it takes a rather 'token attitude towards women' and others believe that it 'uses women's lib as an advertising gimmick.'"

Prof. Norman Macintosh, chairman of the MBA program, assured the Journal that there was no intention to annoy or intimidate anyone, just to get more women interested in the program, since proportionately few have enrolled at Queen's in the past. "If women are going to get equality in management jobs," he pointed out, "they must be as well trained as men."

Early in December, when the School held a meeting to explore MBA possibilities with interested third and fourth-year students, a surprising 90 people turned up, about a quarter of them women whose curiosity was piqued by the controversy. Among the graduates present to field questions about the program was a recent woman graduate, Mrs. Sandra Birkenmayer, an arts graduate of Carleton in 1962 who completed her MBA here in 1971. When she joined the course, she was an inventory clerk with the Air Force in Ottawa; today she's part of the policy analysis team attached to the Ontario Health Ministry.

She pointed out that the job market for women is expanding, for although few employers are actually seeking women, they will give them equal chance with a male applicant. She recommended the public sector as an opening area of opportunity for women MBA's, based on her experience, and agreed with observations that finance, sales and accounting are still more difficult fields for women in Canada than they are in the U.S.

At present, there is one woman in each of the two MBA years. Three years ago there were five.

"Now that the sex-role stereotyping is decreasing in our society," says Dr. Macintosh, "we're hoping to have more women applicants, beginning next fall. Queen's and other universities are turning out women who want what they do to have real impact and who won't be satisfied with what has been called traditionally a 'woman's job'."

THE FUTURE ?

"We have anticipated the management technology of the future"

"We have tried to anticipate the managerial technology of the future," says Norman MacIntosh of the program he chairs. "The building up of a modern faculty has given us an advanced and quite sophisticated design for our M.B.A. program. Many schools are still working on a model that will tend to become more obsolete over time."

What does the future promise for the School of Business?

- "By 1974," says Dean Hand, "we plan to start our small Ph.D. program in the School. Our proposal has come through various academic appraisals successfully. Although the provincial embargo on the financing of new graduate programs still holds, we're looking forward to enrolling our first doctoral candidates in the near future."

- Another prospect for the future is a possible change of name.

Traditional usage tends to stick, especially at Queen's, but it's becoming more and more obvious that "School of Business" and "Commerce" no longer convey the scope and variety of academic work going on in the School.

No one even guesses at this stage what the new name will be, but Dean Hand points out three things: first, although the scope of most schools is broadening, "School of Business Administration" is still the most common name; second, "Faculty of Management Studies" is growing in popularity and acceptance in both Britain and the U.S.; and third, the branch of the Learned Societies to which Dean Hand and his confrères belong is called the "Canadian Association for Administrative Sciences."

- A third and definite prospect is the School's move into the Arts and Social Sciences Complex rising fast where Lower Alfred Street and Richardson Stadium used to be. "We're coming full circle," the Dean points out. "We're going back to a kind of 'family' set-up, where we'll have more casual association with other disciplines, back to the co-operative benefits of our beginnings in 1919."

When the School of Business was established 54 years ago, it shared accommodation with Economics and Political Science in a Union Street "rabbit warren" that had once been a home for "Aged and Friendless Women." The three disciplines were not only under one roof; they were often under the influence of one man, and this lineage of leadership includes the names of Skelton, Clark, Macintosh, Smails, Corry, Knox, Curtis and Deutsch.

Growth split up these neighbouring disciplines, and the inevitable formalities, physical distances and specialization of an expanding campus made it harder to work out co-operative linkages. The move to the new complex will not only make them physical neighbours again, but will restore those practical working and research partnerships which should characterize a university of Queen's human scale.

"Interdisciplinary work is becoming more prominent in higher education these days," reflects the Dean, "and the School of Business suddenly appears to be a precursor, somewhat ahead of the trend.

"Our interdisciplinary experience is likely to shape the future years of the School as we seek out significant applied policy problems to investigate together with other co-operating components of the University."

QUEST for the OPTIMUM

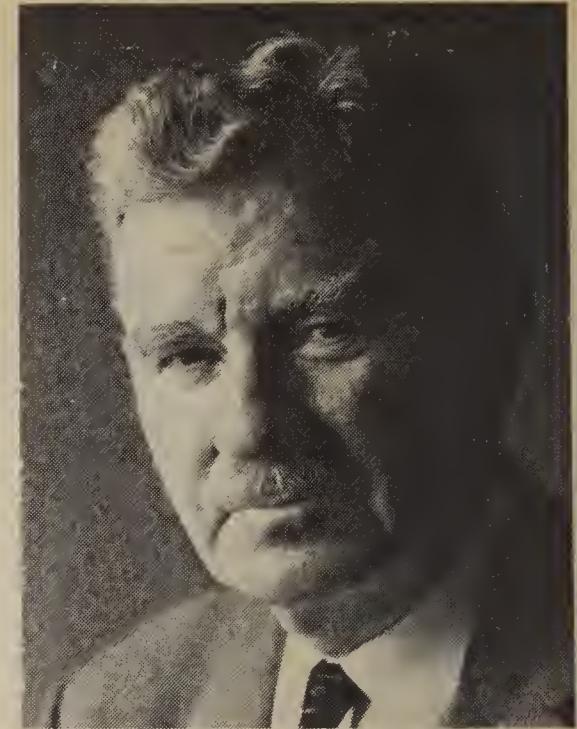

The controversial Bonneau-Corry Report on rationalizing university research

A controversial report on the rationalization of university research was unveiled in November at the annual meeting of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada (AUCC). The report is called Quest for the Optimum and is also known as The Bonneau-Corry Report because of its co-authors—former Queen's Principal, Dr. J.A. Corry, and former Laval Vice-Rector, Louis-Phillippe Bonneau. They were commissioned by the AUCC in 1971 to "study the rationalization of university research" in Canada.

As Dr. Corry puts it, "The AUCC saw clearly that university research had become big business in the last ten years—with governments providing the resources and universities carrying out the work. As this tenuous association of governments and universities developed, there was never any significant discussion of the aims and objectives of the effort and the terms of association."

He says that it had become clear that the two parties were making very different assumptions about the goals of research and the way it should be carried on.

"The universities say their researchers cannot do research according to plans and specifications laid down in detail by somebody else. Governments are on the verge of saying, 'If you can't give us better explanations of how the public interest is served, then we can't go on giving you such large sums of money.' It hasn't yet come to this, but the AUCC was acting in anticipation of this kind of issue arising.

"The universities must set their research houses in order as a means of preserving their autonomy in this area.

"Our report puts its main emphasis on the ways in which they might approach, and make some headway in, this very difficult exercise. If we can get the universities to take this matter seriously, we shall have achieved our main purpose."

Following a wide variety of reactions to the report at the AUCC workshops, researchers, administrators and students at universities across Canada continue to huddle and sort out their reactions to the report's challenges, the degree of threat they feel to academic autonomy, and ways of wording their responses.

Queen's alumni still involved in university research or now in industrial research and development—plus those interested in universities as tax-payers and private supporters—will find Quest for the Optimum an unusually readable and provocative report. It is available for $3.00 per copy from the Circulation Manager, AUCC, 151 Slater St., Ottawa K1P 5N1.

The Evolution of Student Affairs

The Principal has made two appointments recently in the area of Student Affairs. Prof. James A. Whitley, Executive Assistant to the Principal since 1970, has been assigned particular responsibilities in the area of student affairs and services. Finn O. Bogstad, formerly with the Computing Centre, has been named assistant to Professor Whitley and will act as student services liaison officer.

The position of Dean of Student Affairs, which was formerly held by Prof. Stewart Webster, will not be filled for the time being, pending a review of the role of that office by the Senate Committee on Student Affairs.

The administrative structure of student affairs and services has undergone considerable reorganization in recent months, reflecting the steady growth in activity in this key area.

Former Dean Webster's main activities centred on his work as a member of various committees, notably the Senate, the Senate Committee on Student Affairs, the Residences Board, the Student Residences Planning Committee (a subcommittee of Campus Planning), the University Health Council, the Advisory Committee on Radio Broadcasting, the Student Affairs Committee of the School of Graduate Studies, the Union Program Committee, and the Management Committee of the International Centre. He was also an active member of the Ontario Student Affairs Association and its national equivalent. All this committee work will now be handled by Jim Whitley, who was also recently appointed by the Senate as Faculty-Student Advisor to help members of the University and the police conduct the legitimate business of the police effectively, while protecting academic freedom and preventing the misunderstanding that can arise from clandestine investigations.

Professor Whitley's work for the past two years has largely complemented the work of Dr. Webster, with special emphasis on the development of new services, including the Co-Operative Day Care Centre, the Student Counselling Service, the Birth Control and Abortion Information and Referral Service, the Student Affairs Centre at 165 University Avenue, the A.M.S. Housing Service and Job Bank. He is also a director of Elrond College and teaches a full load in the Mathematics Department. In future he will be a member of the University-City Liaison Committee.

Mr. Bogstad, through his contacts with students, will give additional support to the operation of student housing, counselling and career planning and placement services.

It is widely recognized that the scope and quality of student services at Queen's compare favorably with such services at other universities. The recent establishment of the Student Counselling Service, expansion of Career Planning and Placement, changes in the form of residence life and the advanced state of planning for the new University Centre are evidence that Queen's is responding sympathetically to the needs of students in a modern and changing university.

Garry Gannage

Undergraduate elected to Rectorship

Queen's has a new Rector—the second student and the first undergraduate to hold the post since it was established in 1912. Garry Gannage, a member of Arts '74 majoring in history, was elected in November to a three-year term, defeating four other student candidates. He succeeds R. Alan Broadbent, Rector since 1969, and the first student ever elected to the prestigious post.

The Rector sits on the Board of Trustees to represent student interests. The position is unique to Queen's and derives from the Scots-Presbyterian traditions of the University's founders. Apart from business functions, the Rector has a ceremonial position and is present at all formal events, notably Convocations, as one of the three top University personages (along with the Chancellor and the Principal).

Mr. Gannage has pledged himself to maintaining the role of campus ombudsman pioneered so effectively by his predecessor.

Ontario fee strike supported by AMS

Right about now (mid-February) Ontario university students are reassessing the fee strike they called in November. Along with the student governments at 12 other Ontario Universities, the A.M.S. called on Queen's students to withhold their second-term tuition fees to protest government cutbacks in the funding of post-secondary education.

The A.M.S. was aware that a fee strike would not actually put pressure on the government, but felt the move would show that students at Queen's are concerned about the principle of accessibility and also would get a hearing for their grievances. The A.M.S. asked that—

- The student awards program in Ontario change its terms to make 21 the age of independence from parental support. Current age of independence is 24.
- Aid be made available to part-time students.
- The loan ceiling be returned from $600 to its pre-March level of $800.
- The government clarify its position on loans for the upcoming year so that students would know whether they could afford to apply for 1973-74.

Initiate memorial to Dr. Mathers

Friends and admirers of the late Rev. Dr. Donald Mathers have been invited to honour him by contributing to the Donald Mathers Memorial Lectureship in Religion. The fund will be used to bring distinguished scholars of the great religious traditions to Queen's campus to speak and otherwise enhance the work which Dr. Mathers cherished and nourished so well in the University.

Dr. Mathers died in September of leukemia at the age of 51 (see Queen's Review, November-December 1972). He was head of the Department of Religion, Arts and Science, and Principal of the Theological College, an outstanding teacher who attracted hundreds of students to his course in World Religions and who contributed a great deal to the creative life of the Queen's community.

The lectureship fund was initiated by faculty members of the Religion Department and Theological College and members of the College Board with $3,000 toward an objective of $10,000. In January, a committee of faculty members and friends of Donald Mathers decided to make an appeal to the larger Queen's family. Any graduates wishing to honour Dr. Mathers may write to the Theological College or to any of these committee members: Dr. Alex M. Bryans (Paediatrics), Dr. A.J. Coleman (Mathematics), Profs. A.R.C. Duncan or H.M. Estall (Philosophy), Padre A.M. Laverty or Dean R.L. Watts.

Cheques should be made payable to Queen's Theological College (re: Donald Mathers Memorial Lectureship). Receipts for income tax purposes will be issued.

WINNERS OF MUSIC SCHOLARSHIPS

Fourteen of this year's 16 scholarship winners in Music are shown above—and all of them are from Ontario. Fifteen of the awards were made for the first time, through the co-operation of the University and the Kingston Symphony Association, both of which provide $2,500. Another award, the Stanley Dunlop Scholarship ($500 a year) went to Karen Skidmore in her second year of the B.Mus. program. Winners are shown above. Back row, left to right—Craig E. Tompkins, Wallaceburg; Stephen J.

University joins City celebrations of Tercentenary

The University is sharing wholeheartedly in the City of Kingston's celebration of its 300th birthday this year. To date, there are 17 major events on the Tercentenary calendar that will be either hosted by or located at Queen's.

Several of them, including the Mayor's Levee at Grant Hall on New Year's Day, are now history. Among those still to come and in which former Queen's men and Kingstonians may wish to share are these:

- A summer-long, full-scale pictorial exhibit entitled "Kingston 300" which opens at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre the end of May.
- A mammoth civic welcome on June 26 for Queen Elizabeth in the new Richardson Memorial Stadium, plus a civic dinner on campus.

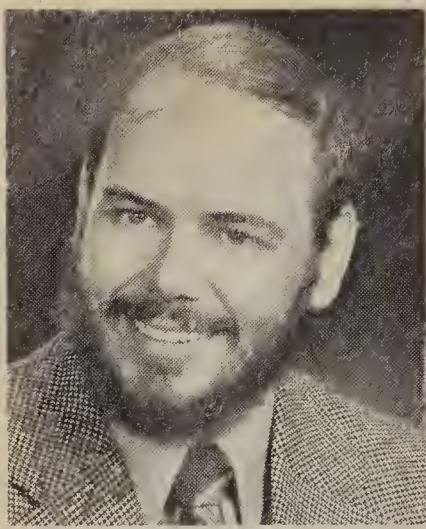

- An ecumenical service in Grant Hall on July 18.
- A 300-year fashion show by the Local Council of Women, to be held in Duncan McArthur Hall May 17.
- A concert by the R.C.M.P. in Jock Harty Arena on June 4.
- American Day, when Queen's will host the U.S. Marine Corps Band, the Fort Henry Guard and the Parliament Hill Guard in Richardson Stadium on August 19.
- A seminar on "Le Monde Français en 1673," organized by the French Area Studies Centre.

Among the other Tercentenary highlights at Queen's will be the convention of the Learned Societies here June 3 through 5. About 5,000 delegates are expected to attend the 40 various Learned Societies' meetings, with another 300 at the meeting of the Royal Society of Canada.

In connection with the pageant of Frontenac's landing, Queen's will house up to 100 canoeists.

Alumni wishing to know more about Tercentenary events in general or Homecoming Week in particular, may write to J.M. Courtright, Vice-Principal (Development and Information), Queen's University. Mr. Courtright heads the University's 11-member Tercentenary Committee.

Ross R. Daily

Graduate to direct 'new' News Department

As a result of a reorganization of the Public Relations Department, effective last December 1, this group will be known as the News Department and will report to the Vice-Principal (Development and Information).

Ross Reid Daily, formerly a supervisor in the University's Computing Centre, has been appointed to head the department as Director. He succeeds L.T. Moore, who resigned last fall. Mr. Daily is a 1970 M.B.A. graduate of Queen's and has held a number of positions at the Computing Centre since his graduation.

Assisted by an Information Officer and support staff, the new News Department Director will be responsible for gathering news about Queen's and disseminating it through official University publications, to the campus, local and national media.

COTC Memorial Fund

The Board of Trustees has accepted a Memorial Loan Fund of up to $20,000 from the Canadian Officer Training Corps (COTC). The fund will be used for student aid, with preference given to sons and daughters of veterans of W.W.II. Other COTC funds are being used for a history of the COTC at Queen's.

Appoint Biology Head

On July 1, Dr. G.R. Wyatt will succeed Dr. B.N. Smallman as head of the Biology Department. Dr. Wyatt (B.A., British Columbia; Ph.D., Cambridge) comes to Queen's from Yale University, his "home base" for teaching and research since 1954. His area of expertise deals with biochemical mechanisms in the growth and development of insects.

Legal Aid extended

Queen's law students have extended their legal aid services to a new student-staffed centre in Belleville. The Kingston office's faculty advisors, secretarial service and organization methods will be shared with the Belleville group, started by three law students and already enjoying good community support.

The Kingston Legal Aid Centre plans to extend its services into family court matters this year.

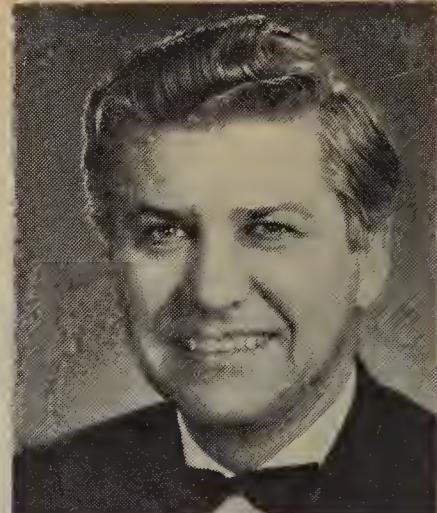

Student on SS Hope

A Kingston student in her final year of Medicine at Queen's is the first Canadian student ever accepted on the American medical ship, the S.S. Hope.

Ann Hoskin spent three months aboard the hospital ship while it floated off the tip of Brazil near the village of Natal. Her three-month experience as a member of the medical crew is being credited by Queen's toward her degree.

Miss Hoskin, the daughter of Rev. John Hoskin, minister of Queen's St. United Church in Kingston, returned home the end of December.

The S.S. Hope, a converted W.W.II vessel, was outfitted with clinics and operating rooms about 12 years ago to sail to underdeveloped countries bringing expert medical help. A few Queen's graduates have served as volunteers for three- and six-month tours of duty, but Ann is the first undergraduate accepted.

Dr. Jackie E. Hogarth

Researchers to receive more practical help

Queen's has formed an Office of Research Administration to assist faculty members engaged in research. Dr. J.E. Hogarth, Acting Dean of the School of Graduate Studies and Research, has assumed the additional responsibility of becoming the Office's first director.

The Office of Research Administration will fill a growing need for better information about research funding and related procedures and policies and will assist faculty members in their financial and contractual dealings with outside agencies.

Recently Dr. Hogarth was also elected first president of a new national association—the Canadian Association of University Research Administrators (CAURA), affiliated with the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada. CAURA is the first Canadian organization to provide a forum, through national and regional meetings, for the discussion and exchange of information and experiences related to university research programs, policies and procedures.

CAURA's founding members are 56 research administrators from 30 Canadian universities. There are also 21 associate members representing government research funding agencies and private foundations.

GREY CUP PARADE: The Queen's-Kingston entry in the December 2 parade through downtown Hamilton included a reminder (above) to millions of Canadian TV viewers that Queen's won the famous cup three years' straight in the '20's. Another banner invited everyone to come to Kingston in 1973 for the city's Tercentenary. Altogether there were 88 in the contingent—the brass band, pipers, dancers, cheerleaders, majorettes and a pageant group.

Boost scholarly books

The Andrew W. Mellon Foundation has awarded $40,000 to the McGill-Queen's University Press to help the Press encourage scholars in the humanities, history and the social sciences by publishing more meritorious works of scholarship in these fields during the next several years than it otherwise could.

Robin Strachan, director of the Press, says, "The award from the U.S. clearly recognizes that we are firmly established in the world of scholarly publishing, and it will enable us to develop our publishing range a little more quickly than would otherwise have been possible."

Clinical Teaching Centre operating

A recent Ontario Government grant of $41,000 will support the first year's operation of a new Clinical Learning Centre, located in Calvin House at 17 King St. W. The Centre is designed to teach student physicians the clinical skills of interviewing, history-taking, record keeping and physical examination—the

French lectures on TV

A Queen's professor of French, Dr. P.S. Day, is lecturing on the CTV series "University of the Air," seen in Eastern Ontario over CJOH-TV.

The series is called "Les Gens Disent" and was designed as an aid to comprehension of idiomatic French through common vocabulary and construction. Only two of the five lectures remain to be telecast: one on February 18 and the other on March 25—both on Sunday, both at 9.00 a.m. Notes to accompany the series are available from the French Department, Queen's University.

so-called "art of medicine."

A registry of voluntary patients is being developed from interested persons throughout the Kingston area. This innovative teaching program is administered by Dr. Alex Bryans, Director of the Health Sciences Office of Education. Mrs. Barbara Valberg is nurse-administrator.

Campus reacts to construction freeze and cutback on hospital teaching beds

Alumni with an eye on Ontario will have noted two changes of government policy in November that inevitably have ramifications for Queen's.

One move was a combined crackdown on hospital budgets, reduction in beds and the consolidation of obstetrical facilities. The other was a freeze on capital construction of university buildings and hospitals.

Commenting on the construction freeze at an AMS meeting, Principal John J. Deutsch said that Queen's and its affiliated hospitals will likely proceed with plans for reconstruction of old facilities where arrangements have already been made with contractors. The proposed University Centre, he added, would not be drastically affected since it is to be financed mainly from private funds. Dr. Deutsch apologized to the students for the current financial upheavals and explained that the administration was still sorting out the many and varied implications of the government policy changes, particularly as they apply to the mammoth Health Sciences complex.

Dr. D.O. Waugh, Vice-Principal (Health Sciences) and Dean of Medicine, took a generally positive approach to the new health policies, saying that reductions in hospital budgets and facilities "all reflect the objective of bringing health care costs under control"—an objective, he added, "likely to receive the support of many concerned citizens." In Kingston, active treatment beds have been reduced from 916 to 813.

Dr. Waugh went on, however, to sum up the special problems created for educational programs in the health professions at Queen's. He pointed out that Queen's is more dependent than other centres on the co-operation and good will of hospital patients. Each year Queen's graduates 46 physicians per 100,000 of area population, compared with 12.5 for Toronto, 16 each for Western and McMaster and 20 for Ottawa. "This means," he said, "that the educational participation of patients in our region is nearly four times that in Toronto, for instance. Thus, any reduction in beds (and patients) will have profound impact on our programs in medicine, nursing and rehabilitation therapy."

The Faculty Board in Medicine has formed a committee to assess the academic impact of the new policy. This committee is trying to determine whether a shift in teaching emphasis from bed patients to out-patients will offset the clinical loss of more than 100 beds in Kingston's hospitals. The use of "satellite" clinical facilities in other communities, such as Belleville, is also being explored.

Gift to Connell Unit

The Connell Coronary Care Unit has received a gift of $75,000 from W. Harold Connell of Toronto, uncle of Dr. W. Ford Connell after whom the Unit was named following his retirement from Queen's in 1971.

A cheque for $53,000 went directly to Kingston General Hospital, where the unit is located, and a second gift of $22,000 was presented to Queen's to enable Dr. John O. Parker to purchase special radiologic equipment for the Cardiopulmonary Laboratory.

In the Coronary Care Unit's first 11 months of operation, many lives have been saved. The mortality rate for patients with acute heart disease was 13 percent, considerably lower than the 25 to 35 percent rate in hospitals lacking such a unit.

At the Branches

Washington Charter Meeting

The charter meeting of the newly formed Washington Branch was held at the home of W.F. Mable, Sc. '40, in Gaithersburg, Maryland, on Saturday evening, October 28.

An excellent turnout enjoyed cocktails and a magnificent buffet dinner, courtesy Wilf and Mary Mable. Murray Gill, Field Secretary of the Alumni Association, presented a formal charter to Wilf Mable, newly elected president of the Branch, and all Queen's alumni and alumnae present signed the document, signifying their attendance at the charter meeting.

Belleville Branch Meeting

The fall meeting of the Belleville Branch took place on November 15 at the Sun Valley Motor Inn. Prof. Cecil E. Law, Director of the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport (based at Queen's) and professor in the School of Business, presented an illustrated talk on the Institute's radical proposal to transport oil from the Canadian Arctic to U.S. markets via a railway/pipeline combination featuring a 1,240-mile Arctic railway (see feature in Queen's Review, July-August 1972).

David A. Sellers, B.A. '68, B.Ed. '69, was elected president of the Branch for the coming year.

Present at the first meeting of the St. John's Branch, at the Newfoundland Officers Mess, were: kneeling on the floor: Dave Penty, Sc. '67, Mrs. F. Swaine (Cathy Macdonald), Arts '68, Mrs. P.C. Helwig and Rev. R.T. Mercer, Arts '51. Seated: Maj. Alan Sutherland, Mrs. Sutherland (Alyce Casselman), B.N.Sc. '59, Dr. Guy Brassard, Arts '65, Mrs. R.W. Nutbeam (Megan Moores), Arts '51, Dr. S.W. Butler (Martha Thompson), Arts '67, Dr. Doug Butler (Surgery 69-70), Dr. Stephen Papezik and R.W. Nutbeam.

Hamilton Branch Rallies to Host Grey Cup Paraders

The Hamilton Branch can take a bow for the help it gave the 88-member contingent that made up the Queen's-Kingston entry in the Grey Cup Parade. Under the direction of Wes Jones, Sc. '70, the Hamilton alumni provided overnight accommodation for majorettes, cheerleaders, Fort Henry Guardsmen and the bandsmen. In fact, the request for billets was so well received that in the final analysis there were many more alumni beds offered than were needed. The executive has expressed its warm thanks to all who offered and all who put up guests.

On the night of the Grey Cup game, the Hamilton Branch welcomed about 100 members and guests to another festive event—a buffet dinner and dance at the Faculty Club of McMaster University. President Gregg McKelvey, Phys. Ed. '54, noted that "those in attendance represented a wide age range and a variety of Faculties."

Hamilton has one event planned for February: a curling party on Saturday the 17th at the Wentworth Curling Club. According to organizer John Chown, Law '70, the party is for those who've never curled before as well as for veterans.

History of K.G.H. being published

Margaret Angus, fast becoming one of this country's best known social historians after a 'first career' in radio and drama at Queen's, has written a long-awaited book about an institution inextricably linked with Queen's. The book is entitled Kingston General Hospital 1832-1972: A Social and Institutional History, and will be on sale in March.

From its earliest beginnings in a warehouse, a blockhouse and a brewery, Mrs. Angus traces the hospital's progress through periods of service as military barracks, the first Parliament Buildings of the Province of Canada (Kingston was capital), a charity hospital and, eventually, a public institution incorporated in time to help cope with the cholera epidemic of 1847. Mrs. Angus records how, from 1854 on, Queen's Medical Faculty and K.G.H. progressed together and adapted to meet local needs. She mentions specifically that it took only six months after the discovery of X-rays for K.G.H. to acquire its first machine.

Prof. H.P. Gundy, editor of the Queen's Quarterly, has called it "a fascinating success story and no mere annals." "This book," he says, "will appeal to the general reader for its wide social perspective, its grasp of medical and nursing progress, and above all for its compelling human interest."

Symbol Part of Queen's New Graphic Style

The Board of Trustees has given final approval to a new graphic style and symbol for the University, both devised by Peter Dorn, Director of Graphic Design.

The next step will be a style manual to give members of the University advice on principles of design and to outline details of editorial procedure and typographical presentation.

The new graphic "house style," as Mr. Dorn calls it, is intended to identify Queen's consistently wherever pamphlets, brochures, calendars and other printed materials are issued in the name of Queen's.

Type-faces chosen for standard use were Palatino as the central type (mainly for text) and Optima as the contrasting and alternate fount (mainly for headline use). Both have been designed in the past 15 years by Hermann Zapf, and they were intended to complement one another despite their visual contrasts.

A "logo" or "logotype" based on Palatino has been devised for the words "Queen's University" so that the title will serve as a mark of identification. The letters have been adjusted so precisely that the logo cannot be set from standard types and must be obtained from the Graphic Design Unit.

The most outstanding element in the new graphic identity is a symbol that will identify Queen's as the source of a large number and variety of publications, notices and presentations. The symbol's central element is a capital letter Q with its swash tail accentuated. In the centre of the Q is a crown, drawn like no actual or heraldic crown and designed to complement the logo with which it will often appear. These two elements — the Q and the crown — are placed inside a shield as a reminder of the coat of arms the University bears, but the break in the shield shows that neither the shield nor other elements are to be read heraldically.

There are no heraldic limitations on the use of such a symbol. It may be used in any colour or combination of colours, as a design on a solid colour or in an outline version — and both variants can be reversed from positive to negative.

It was emphasized to both Board and Senate that this symbol is not intended to replace the coat of arms assigned to the University by the College of Arms. A coat of arms is not flexible and should not be used except in the precise detail and colours registered with the College. Therefore the coat of arms, commonly known as "the Queen's crest," will be reserved for select and ceremonial use "where the full dignity, authority and traditional ideals of the University are to be affirmed." To avoid disrespectful, incorrect and undistinguished use of the coat of arms, the symbol will be used instead where what's needed is essentially a mark of Queen's identity.

The seal of the Senate, its official mark of academic authority, will continue to be stamped on all the official documents it issues.

A brochure has been written by Dr. George Whalley of the Graphics Advisory Committee to explain the evolution, nature and proposed use of all the elements of the approved house style.

The University as an anti-doomsday weapon

By Reginald H. Clark

Deep down all of us know that things are not what they were when we were young. The old school, our town, religion, politics, the country, the weather, the lot, all seem to be going down hill. In our worst moments we feel the golden age has passed and the world is going to pot.

Until very recently these thoughts were best kept to ourselves, of course, for they have long been recognized as signs of old age or mental decay. But suddenly it seems we can be assured that we are as young as we feel, for these thoughts are shared by young people and are supported by an endless variety of paperbacks and TV programs proclaiming doom and disaster.

Now I have read most of these paperbacks and have sat up at night reading exciting chapters from the United Nations Statistical Handbooks. It has become quite clear to me that the world problems we face of growing population, hunger, resource depletion and increasing pollution of the environment are critical and that the catastrophic global conflict is a daily possibility. These problems are documented with sufficient accuracy that they cannot be dismissed as a "trendy load of high-class uneconomic rubbish." Neither can these problems be allowed to grow, with the implied assurance that science and technology, inspired by the traditional economic incentives, will eventually provide solutions. There is no question that these are false arguments and hopes, since they take no account of the exponential time scale of today's life. In my opinion, there is ample justification for concern.

"A doomsday attitude would be morally inexcusable"

It would be wrong and morally inexcusable, on the other hand, to adopt a doomsday attitude. For some, this already provides an excuse for withdrawal from society to pursue an isolated intellectual life or, by contrast, to indulge in sensual and escapist activities. The doomsday attitude presumes that the dire predictions for the future are inevitable, that nothing will occur, or can be done, to change the course of future events. This attitude, which should be completely foreign to us, indicates a loss of faith and confidence which would lead to cynical despair. Prevalence of a doomsday attitude can only lead to disaster. As Kenneth Clark has said, "It is the lack of confidence more than anything else that kills a civilization. We can destroy ourselves by cynicism and delusion just as effectively as by bombs."

I find myself to be neither a doomsday prophet nor an unthinking optimist. I recognize the importance of the pace of change or more precisely, if you recall, of the second order differential. I know that the world's population, pollution levels, resource consumption, demand for food and even crime are exponentially rising on this spaceship with its finite resources. In my more gloomy moments I also tend to believe that wise decision-making is on the exponential decline.

"By the year 2000 there will be half-a-billion university graduates"

But I also know that there has been an exponential increase in the awareness of these problems and more importantly in our knowledge, education and means of communication. Do you realize, for example, that whereas the world's population presently doubles every 35 years, the number of high school graduates doubles every five years and the number of university graduates every seven years? If we extrapolate these rates to the year 2000, it means that one-half of the world's population of seven billion will have gone to high school and there will be 16 times the current number of university graduates, i.e. about half-a-billion graduates.

These rates of change, neglected by the doomsday prophets, are numerically more significant than those for the less desirable changes which are so loudly publicized.

However, we cannot be satisfied to play a simple numbers game since knowledge, education and communication systems can be used for good or evil as dictated by our moral and political attitudes.

This seems to be the heart of the matter; are our moral and political attitudes sound enough, good enough and strong enough to permit mankind to find the path of survival or, better yet, to live in the age of aquarius?

Whatever your judgment, I believe you will agree with me that the power and authority of the church in these matters has dramatically declined and that the state cannot or should not fill this vacuum. It is my conviction that the universities must assume this responsibility to safeguard, and restructure when necessary, our moral and political attitudes.

It's an awesome responsibility in an exponential age

But ah, you say, how can universities who have shown themselves to be so ponderous, so introspective, so isolated, so consumed with internal politics, so dependent on government support and, at times, so stupid in recent years, suddenly become the source of enlightenment and speak with power of authority?

"Why the universities? Because of their indirect latent power"

My argument is simply that there is no other organized body of knowledgeable men and women who can undertake this task and can be assured that its progress and endeavours will diffuse into the world at large. My suggestion is in fact compatible with the traditional role of universities. You should remember that although diluted in their purpose and weakened at times by public pressure and professorial indifference, universities still form the meeting ground for the brightest intellects in the world's population. Their libraries alone constitute a fountain of knowledge which, together with the stimulation of personal discussions, guarantees their place as centres of learning. No other group or institution provides the mixture of disciplinary thinking and intimate involvement of all age groups which are so necessary for the distillation of new concepts and the affirmation of everlasting truths. There can be little question that the universities have the authority.

But, you might say, the university does not have the power. It's true that the visible power of the university in terms of direct influence on society will probably continue to wax and wane. However, the real and lasting power of the university lies in its ability to influence and direct the thinking of its graduates. This indirect latent power is invested in and exercised by its graduates throughout their lifetimes in all fields of human endeavour. It is rarely mentioned, except, perhaps, on the occasion of a somewhat emotional convocation address, but it is present and it is capable of being developed to a far greater degree. Just remember that if my extrapolated figures are correct, universities will have directly or indirectly influenced the thinking of at least one-half of the world's population by the end of the century.

"Clarity and charity must begin at home"

In the universities our first task is to insure that clarity and charity begin at home. More emphasis must be placed on the lasting qualities and abilities a university is able to impart to its graduates. Unfortunately, in this observer's opinion, mechanistic rather than humanistic problems currently appear to be of greater concern—as exemplified by the misplaced effort in such diverse areas as attempts to standardize professors' responsibilities, debate on marking procedures, the completion of endless government questionnaires, adapting to the varying degrees of financial support, not to mention the time-consuming trivialities discussed by sub-committees of sub-committees.

It is conceivable that the new financial circumstances of the universities will cause each university to review its work and recognize that it must emphasize its traditional responsibilities to the student and society. This, to my mind, is where we must begin.

We must then turn as a university community and a society to examine the current situation. Facts must be separated from fiction, wisdom must be separated from emotional rhetoric and doomsday preaching. This search for the truth cannot be allowed to be impeded by disciplinary boundaries, government restrictions or the seductions of industry. The public must also be made aware that our success in these endeavours will not be measured by the number of publications or by any other simple accounting technique but by the degree of dedication, motivation and maturity of our students.

In summary, I am convinced that:

- Our moral and political attitudes will determine how we employ our anti-doomsday weapons of knowledge, education and means of communication.
- The universities must accept the awesome responsibility for safe-guarding and restructuring our moral and political attitudes.
- The universities must impart to their graduates in greater measure the values and attitudes which will enable them to comprehend the global problems, contribute to their solution and lead them to recognize the amazing opportunities of this exponential age.

This article is from an address made by Dr. Clark to Queen's alumni attending the Pulp and Paper Convention in Montreal in January. The author is Professor of Chemical Engineering at Queen's, is the architect of a unique interdisciplinary course entitled "Nature, Science and Man" (see Queen's Review, March-April 1972) and, with Prof. James H. Brown, is a Canadian pioneer in the field of glass recycling and reclamation.

Former Days and Quaker Ways

First written in 1961 and printed in 1965, for limited distribution, Former Days and Quaker Ways by Dr. Arthur Garratt Dorland, Arts '10 (M.A., Yale, Ph.D., Toronto, LL.D., Western) has been brought out in a second edition in response to a demand that has grown over the years.

Dr. Dorland, Professor (Emeritus) of History and formerly head of the Department at the University of Western Ontario, writes of his boyhood in the Wellington area of Prince Edward County and of his connections with the Quakers, with whom his father was a minister. In later life the author served as chairman of the Canadian Friends Service Committee for 12 years and as Clerk (Moderator) Canada at the yearly meeting of Friends for 17 years.

Of particular interest to the alumni are his reminiscences of student days at Queen's. Here is a sampling:

G.M. Grant — "Queen's University in the Edwardian era was a small, struggling institution but intensely self-conscious and loyal to its Scottish and Presbyterian traditions. Though Principal Grant had died four years previously, his dynamic influence still pervaded the halls of Queen's. Because Principal Grant had once knocked off the hat of a careless undergraduate who had neglected to remove it himself when entering the Old Arts Building, no one would have dared to wear his hat in this building. This custom was strictly observed, and any infraction might be dealt with by the students' disciplinary body, the Arts Concursum Iniquitatis."

Fraternities — "Though the university was small, it had a very full and distinguished life of its own. No student fraternities existed at Queen's. This was partly because the university faculty, with its British training, was definitely opposed to such institutions which, being of American origin, would be suspect anyhow. There was also in the university too strong a democratic tradition among the student body to tolerate any artificial barriers of this kind within its community. In any case, the smallness of the student body at this time made such organizations as fraternities superfluous."

Social Life — "In accordance with the Puritan tradition in which I had been brought up, but principally out of deference to my mother, who was paying for my education and had strong convictions concerning the morality of dancing, I did not indulge in this pleasant past-time. But as there were a considerable number who, like myself, either did not dance or did not know how, a programme was arranged for their entertainment running concurrently with the dance numbers in one of the big lecture rooms. Sometimes the talent on these programmes was of a high order. I therefore enjoyed all the dances to the full and did not feel that I was being deprived of anything really important. . . No young girl going to her first ball could get more of a thrill out of the occasion than I, going in a cab to my first At Home in Grant Hall, arrayed in my first suit of 'tails' and wearing white kid gloves, which were then always worn at formal affairs by both men and women.

"Perhaps I might add, as a commentary on the quality and workmanship of those days, that this suit of tails was made to measure at Bristol's store in Picton, of imported English vicuna cloth, by one of their tailors. It is the only suit of tails I have ever owned, having been worn at every formal function I ever attended, and performing the same service for my three sons while they were at university. It surely deserved to go down in history!"

SPORTS WRAP-UP, 1972-73

This was the year the Gals outshone the Gaels

Women athletes dominated the Intercollegiate scene at Queen's this year, leading the province in participation numbers and in quality performance as well.

Five Ontario Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Association championships and two individual event championships were awarded to Queen's. Two athletes proceeded to the Canadian Women's Intercollegiate Athletic Union national championship: Cathy Brace in swimming, and Vivien Symington in athletics.

The Golden Gals won team championships in badminton, figure skating, ice hockey, synchronized swimming, and intermediate basketball. For the hockey team it meant a championship for the first time in 47 years, except for a co-championship in 1961.

Judy Krupanszky won an individual championship in fencing and Janet Spence an individual award in outdoor archery. Miss Krupanszky represented Queen's in the Canadian nationals, and Karen Carson was named to the Ontario field hockey team. Other teams made a good showing, taking second place in outdoor archery, intermediate field hockey and intermediate volleyball.

In the team sports Queen's male athletes fared best in volleyball, winning all six tournaments and the East section championship of the Ontario University Athletic Association. They lost to York in the exciting finals hosted by Queen's late in January.

The water polo team again had a good season, winning the East Section, but losing ultimately to Western in the OUAA semi-finals. In the so-called major sports, the football team had a 3-3 record and missed out on the play-offs for the first time in years. The hockey team improved as the season progressed and ultimately lost to Laurentian in the semi-finals by a sudden-death overtime score of 5-4; their league record was 10-6-1. The basketball team had a 4-8 record and failed to make the play-offs. The rugby team was out of the play-offs for the first time in five years. The soccer team had a 3-4-1 record.

In the individual sports, the swimming team had four swimmers and a diver who met the tough standards at the OUAA meet to qualify for the national championships in Calgary. The track team had its stars in both the outdoor and indoor seasons who placed among the champions; Dave Jarvis, Don Price, and Hugh Fraser, in particular, won several events with record times.

In the Ontario University OUAA indoor track and field championships, Queen's placed third. Hugh Fraser and Dave Jarvis scored victories as well as helping Queen's to first-place finishes in the mile relay and the four-man 200-metre relay.

Gaels Captain Colin Loudon scores against York Yeomen at the Jock Harty Arena. About 1,500 fans attended each home game.

Sue Drowley was captain of the championship figure-skating team which successfully defended its title against four other universities.

Of Books and Benefactors

The reputation of the Douglas Library has been greatly enhanced in recent months by four special gifts and acquisitions.

One consists of three vellum leaves from 15th century Books of Hours in manuscript, purchased through the Ernest Cockburn Kyte Memorial Fund. Mr. Kyte, who died in Peterborough in March 1971 at the age of 94, had been chief librarian at Queen's from 1927 until his retirement in 1947. The fund in his memory was established by Queen's and has been generously supported by Mr. Kyte's friends.

The former librarian's special interest was medieval manuscripts, and the Books of Hours leaves were selected in consultation with his widow, Mrs. Anne Kyte, after they were discovered in Europe by Dr. Kathleen Morand of the Art History Department. The 500-year-old manuscripts, richly coloured and beautifully illuminated, are being framed and inscribed for mounting in Special Collections.

A second addition to the same collection is what curator William F.E. Morley describes as "a magnificent edition of Agricola's De Re Metallica, a large folio volume bound in full vellum." The book was purchased by Patrick Joseph Moran, a graduate of Mining 1911, and donated to Queen's by Prof. Arthur E. Hyde, Sc.'37, of Kingston.

De Re Metallica is probably the most celebrated work of Georg Agricola (the Latinized form of Georg Bauer), 1494-1555, a German scientist known as the father of mineralogy because he was the first to classify minerals on a scientific basis. The work was translated from the original Latin by Herbert Hoover, thirty-first President of the United States, and his wife, Lou Henry. Their translation was published in London in 1912, and it is this edition which Professor Hyde presented to the Library.

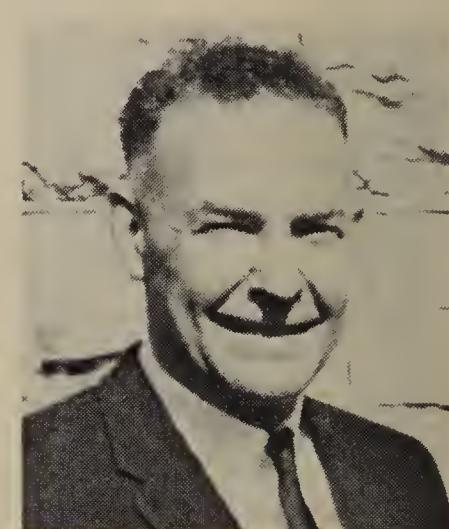

Donald C. MacDonald

Another notable and sizable gift was made by alumnus Huntley Sinclair, Com. '24, to Special Collections. "In fact," says curator William Morley, "unpacking gifts from Mr. Huntley Sinclair is becoming one of our more exciting annual events."

In the fall of 1971, Mr. Sinclair added to his Burns (Robbie Burns) Collection at Queen's a manuscript copy of a Burns letter, 96 photographic facsimiles of original letters and poems in a limited edition, and a copy of Letters Addressed to Clarinda by Robert Burns.

This past autumn, he presented 14 volumes—a combination of rare and private press books. Three of the rare books are actually "incunabula" published before 1500 in the infancy of printing. One is a Latin Bible printed by Johann Frobén in Basle in 1491; the second is St. Augustine's "Sermon on the Mount" in Latin, printed on the first press in Paris; and the other is the "Summa" of St. Thomas Aquinas, printed by Bernardini in Venice in 1496. The other eight rare books are dated 1520, 1541, 1547, 1569 and 1575. They emanate from Paris, Venice, Geneva and Bordeaux, cities that became the printing centres of Europe.

Archivist Ian Wilson has commented that "the materials to illustrate a history of the first century of printing in Europe could very well be based on this splendid collection alone!"

Four of the five other gift books were printed between 1904 and the mid-1920's on private presses in England—the Golden Cockerel Press, the Shakespeare Head Press and the Fanfrolico Press, a so-called "vanity press" established by the famous Bloomsbury Group. Rounding out the Sinclair donation is a two-volume collection of "fugitive English poetry" called English Minstrelsy, printed in Edinburgh in 1810.

The Library's benefactor, Huntley Sinclair, is a native of Ontario but sent the books from England where he now makes his home in Misarden Park, Gloucestershire, and lists his occupation as "farmer." In addition to a Bachelor of Commerce degree from Queen's, he holds an M.A. from Edinburgh. He taught economics and commerce at both U.B.C. and Washington University, Missouri, served overseas in W.W.II. with the RCAF and then UNRRA, and was president of the International Congress of the World Liberal Union before settling down to "farming" in England.

Another Queen's graduate who has recently proved a benefactor of the Archives is Donald C. MacDonald, M.A. '39 (History), president of the Canadian Labour Congress. After 17 years as leader of the C.C.F. and N.D.P. in Ontario, Mr. MacDonald deposited his extensive accumulation of letters and reports in the University Archives. The collection, which has already been sorted for use by student and faculty researchers, occupies 90 feet of shelving.

Mr. MacDonald has also worked closely with Archivist Ian Wilson to help Queen's obtain the full official records of the provincial C.C.F. and New Democratic Party to build up an important research resource around the core of the "Donald C. MacDonald Papers."

A fifth acquisition has come through poet F.R. Scott, LL.D. '64, whose private collection of Canadian poetry magazines formed the substantial basis of the collection founded in his name in 1969.

His gift is the reprint edition of a complete set of Poetry, a magazine founded 50 years ago by Harriet Monroe in Chicago. It quickly became a landmark in North American literary history, with many important Canadian associations.

The cloth-bound set of the first 50 years will be added to the F.R. Scott Canadian Poetry and Magazine Collection, part of the Lorne Pierce Collection of Canadiana, and a subscription will keep the library holdings up to date.

New Vice-Principal (Health Sciences)

Dr. H. Garfield Kelly, Med. '40, FRCPS(C) became Vice-Principal (Health Sciences) on March 1, succeeding Dr. Douglas O. Waugh, who had served as both Dean of Medicine and Vice-Principal since 1970. Dean Waugh will continue as Dean, but recommended that his former area of responsibility be divided because of the greatly increased workload and the administrative complexity in the health sciences brought about from recent government policy changes and the formation of the Queen's-Kingston Health Sciences Complex.

As Vice-Principal (Health Sciences), Dr. Kelly is responsible for co-ordinating the Faculty of Medicine, the Schools of Nursing and Rehabilitation Therapy, and the Student Health Service. He will represent the Principal in health science dealings with the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Colleges and Universities.

Dr. Kelly, a native of Kingston, joined the faculty at Queen's in 1949, following service with the R.C.A.F. and postgraduate training in Montreal, Toronto and London, England. He has been a Professor since 1966 (Department of Medicine) and before assuming his new post he was also Associate Dean, Postgraduate Affairs, in the Faculty of Medicine and Director of Continuing Education for all the health sciences.

Recognizing the need for continuing contact with the practice of medicine, Dr. Kelly is maintaining a limited clinical activity in his special field of rheumatology.

Find Leacock manuscript

An original manuscript by Stephen Leacock, Canada's best-known humorist and a well-known political economist, was recently uncovered in the Department of Economics in Dunning Hall. It was in a brown paper parcel which had apparently remained in the department since 1934, when Professor Leacock visited to give the presidential address at the sixth annual meeting of the Canadian Political Science Association.

The parcel contained notes of papers delivered at the meeting, plus the Leacock paper, "The Revision of Democracy," written in an old exercise book (those, too, were stringent times) and signed by the author. The document has been deposited for safekeeping in the Queen's Archives.

Queen's people present gifts to Art Centre

The Agnes Etherington Art Centre has received four important gifts for the Permanent Collection, all from members of the Queen's "family."

Dr. Philip N. Golomb, a graduate of Med. '66, has presented an early painting by Canadian artist Tom Thomson, "A Northern Shore," signed and dated by the artist in 1913.

Beatrice E. Bryce, Dean of Women from 1959 to 1971, presented two paintings, one by French artist Charles Emile Jacque (1813-94) and one by German artist E. Boehm.

Dr. R.G.H. Smails, Professor Emeritus and Director of the School of Commerce and Administration from 1951 to 1962, presented a handsome silver inkstand, a family possession, made in London about 1882.

University Council has permanent secretariat

In line with a recommendation at last year's annual meeting, the University Council has set up a permanent secretariat in the Office of the Vice-Principal (Development and Information). Vice-Principal James M. Courtright became Acting Secretary in January, subject to confirmation at the annual meeting on June 1. He succeeds Peter Hennessy, who has been Secretary since he joined the Faculty of Education in 1968 and who will continue as an elected member of the Council.

Dr. M.H. Yeates

Appoint Geography head

Dr. Maurice H. Yeates, a member of faculty since 1965, has been appointed to a five-year term as head of the Department of Geography. He succeeds Dr. R.I. Ruggles.

Professor Yeates was educated in Britain and the U.S. and taught at the University of Florida before coming to Queen's. He is co-author of four books and author of two others, the most recent to be published later this year under the title An Introduction to Quantitative Analysis in Human Geography. Dr. Yeates' current research for the federal government deals with present and probable patterns of urbanization in the area between Quebec City and Windsor.

Elrond a summer 'hotel'

Elrond College, that 15-storey student-operated residence on Princess St., will function as a summer hotel once its student tenants finish exams and leave Kingston. The management is hoping that Queen's graduates and their families and friends who visit the city for Convocation or Tercentenary celebrations will stay at Elrond for a few days or even overnight. They are also looking for longer bookings from Summer School students.

Among the first of their off-season guests will be University Councillors attending the Council's annual meeting on the weekend of June 1. Their visit will give Elrond an opportunity to try out its conference and seminar facilities, even though the main sessions will be on campus.

"Elrond's design innovations enable us to accommodate guests in self-contained units for two, four, six or 12 persons," says Doug Fletcher, co-ordinator of summer bookings. "Each unit is complete with kitchen and living room."

Among the other features he cites as attractions are maid service, sun-deck, sauna bath, parking—and a view of the 1,000 Islands. Information is available from Mr. Fletcher at Elrond College, 401 Princess St., Kingston (544-1842).

AMS elections close, but turn-out apathetic

In the AMS elections held in February, Steve Brereton (third-year Economics) and Bruce Trotter (third-year Biology) were chosen president and vice-president. They defeated one other team—Lyn Whitham and Steve Sugar. It was one of the closest votes in many years (the winners had a majority of only 50) and one of the smallest turnouts at the polls (only 30 per cent of those eligible voted).

Under the Brereton-Trotter leadership, students may anticipate a strengthened and broadened Education Commission, forums and symposia to make students more aware of campus problems, an Information Bank and more policy papers.

Among the 30-odd student society positions filled by acclamation (a record number) were those of Graduate Student Society President (Fraser Dunford) and Vice-President (Bob Maloney).

Dr. W.J. Forrest

Graduate named Director of Rehab Therapy School

Dr. W.J. Forrest, Med. '65, has been appointed Director of the School of Rehabilitation Therapy, Professor in the School, and Clinical and Research Associate in the Department of Rehabilitation Medicine.

Dr. D.C. Symington, Director of the School until Dr. Forrest's five-year term begins in July, will remain head of the Department of Rehabilitation Medicine, which will continue to expand its activities.

Dr. Forrest will continue to do some teaching as Associate Professor of Anatomy.

CAMPUS CAPSULES

A total of 860 students and staff members participated in a special blood donor clinic in memory of Donald Mathers, Principal of the Theological College at the time of his death last September. . . Contributions to the Donald Mathers Memorial Lectureship (see January-February issue) had reached $10,000 by March 1.

On March 16 the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation presented its annual and much-coveted Lamp of Learning award to the Rev. Dr. A.M. Laverty, Queen's chaplain for 26 years and member of the Frontenac County Board of Education for almost 22 years.

The Learning Society, the 260-page final report of the Commission on Post-Secondary Education in Ontario, was published in February and is sold for $2.50 by the Ontario Government Book Store, 880 Bay St., Toronto. Queen's Principal, Dr. John J. Deutsch, is a member of the Commission, which has been at work on these iconoclastic recommendations since 1969.

According to Kingston's Tercentenary Calendar, these are some of the major celebrations connected with Queen's this summer: On June 3 the Secretary of State opens the summer-long exhibition 'Heritage Kingston' at the Art Centre. . . From May 27 through June 10, 5,000 scholars from 40 Learned Societies will convene on campus. . . Queen Elizabeth will meet thousands of her subjects at Richardson Memorial Stadium and will dine at Leonard Hall.

It's all done with superconducting magnets

MAGLEV: The Transport of the Future in Stirling Hall Today

A recent National Research Council grant has drawn campus attention to an unusual research group that's developing a mode of space-age transportation. The "negotiated grant" of $133,000 went to the Canadian Magnetic Levitation (Maglev) Group and will be used to set up a laboratory test facility for levitation experiments.

The Maglev group is an interdisciplinary team of engineers and other scientists operating under the leadership of Prof. David L. Atherton of Queen's Physics Department. It includes professors, research staff and students from the University of Toronto and McGill as well as Queen's.

The development of high-speed Maglev guided ground vehicles is supported by the Ministry of Transport (Transportation Development Agency) and is administered through the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport, based at Queen's and co-ordinated by Prof. Cecil Law.

Professor Atherton is the Canadian pioneer in the development of magnetic levitation, having experimented for the past 10 years with superconducting magnets which allow high-strength magnetic fields to be generated without the dissipation of large amounts of electric power. In the Maglev system, magnets are mounted on the vehicle's underside, inducing eddy currents in an aluminum guideway and producing lift force when the vehicle moves. An auxiliary wheel suspension is required at low speeds, but the generation of large lift forces begins at modest velocity, and suspension heights of 12 inches are feasible.

What keeps a Maglev vehicle moving forward is a linear synchronous motor, made up of superconducting magnets on the vehicle, and energized loops in the guideway. Estimated velocity is 300 mph.

The test facility, which will be built at Queen's, will permit approximately full-scale testing of a levitation magnet, and will enable Professor Atherton's group to acquire engineering and operating experience.

Though this form of transportation is likely 10 to 15 years away in Canada, Maglev is already attracting widespread international interest because of growing highway, airway and airport congestion. Japan plans to install a similar system between Tokyo and Osaka when the present Tokaido high-speed railway reaches saturation capacity.

A DOUBLE FIRST FOR QUEEN'S

Cathy Baxter of Queen's MBA program is the first woman to win a Samuel Bronfman Fellowship. Along with Mike Day (to her right) and Jim Leech, also senior MBA students, she helped bring Queen's a record 50 percent of the six prestigious Bronfman awards, which are competed for annually at 18 business schools and institutes. With Vice-Principal James M. Courtright beaming approval (left), the awards were presented by Melvin W. Griffin, Sc. '44, Executive Vice-President, House of Seagram, Montreal.

Staff reject union but form association

The support staff of the University have formed a Staff Association in a successful bid to thwart an attempt by C.U.P.E. to unionize non-academic workers and at the same time provide a legitimate organization for negotiating about personnel policies when necessary.

There are at present three unions on campus representing non-professional librarians, maintenance staff and some research and technical workers.

The executive of the new Staff Association has begun meeting on a regular basis with Vice-Principal R.J. Kennedy (Administration) and members of the Personnel Department. Topics covered include the posting of job vacancies on campus (a practice recently initiated in the publication Queen's Gazette) and the establishment of grievance procedures for non-academic staff.

A.E. MacRae Award

Andy Pipe, B.A. '70, Med. '74, has been named recipient of the highly prized A.E. MacRae Social Engineering Award "to aid the development of persons with real capacity for social leadership."

Queen's chosen for Resource Studies

A Centre for Resource Studies is to be set up at Queen's under the joint sponsorship of the University, the Ministry of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Mining Association of Canada. Queen's will supply the academic capabilities, drawing on at least 10 departments, and the physical facilities. Her two partners will provide basic funding — a quarter of a million dollars a year for an initial period of five years.

The Centre will carry out research and analysis on important questions of Canadian resource policy — such as the role of mining in the domestic

Admissions experiment

Next fall, up to 50 young people who have not completed high school may be enrolled in Arts and Science in a special experiment. Newspaper ads placed in January and February invited applications from highly motivated people with enough talent and ability to suggest they could benefit from university education. Candidates must have completed Grade 10 before leaving high school. They must be over 18 but preferably under 21 and have never attended a university.

The admissions procedure includes an independently conducted project and various ability and achievement tests. Those admitted will be expected to meet normal standards of performance, but maximum possible assistance will be available in terms of academic and personal counselling. Their progress will be measured against that of a control group of regularly admitted students.

The experiment is a result of admissions policy changes recommended by the University Council and recently approved by the Senate.

Persons over 21 may apply for admission under the "mature student regulation" already in effect at Queen's.

economy and in export trade. These studies are expected to influence future resource policies, particularly those dealing with conservation and the direction and nature of mining activities. The Centre will concentrate initially on metallics, non-metallics and some industrial minerals, such as potash and asbestos. All research results will be made available to the public.

The structure and interdisciplinary goals of the Centre for Resource Studies are comparable to those of the Institute for Guided Ground Transport established at Queen's two years ago.

Postdoctoral fellowship named for Skelton-Clark

The Principal has approved a new program of postdoctoral fellowships to be supported by the Skelton-Clark Memorial Foundation. The awards will be for Canadian Studies in the Department of Political Studies and the first one, valued at $10,000, will be awarded in the 1973-74 academic year.

The Foundation honours O.D. Skelton and W.C. Clark, two sons of Queen's who played key roles in external affairs and economics under Prime Ministers King and Bennett.

Ecumenist preacher at Baccalaureate Service

Guest preacher at the 132nd annual Baccalaureate Service on March 11 was Father Gregory Baum, O.S.A., D.T., LL.D., one of Canada's most outstanding theologians and most articulate advocates of Christian unity. Berlin-born Father Baum, ordained in the Order of St. Augustine, teaches at St. Michael's College in the University of Toronto, is editor of the magazine The Ecumenist and author of nine books published since 1958. His first book was That They May Be One and his most recent is New Horizon.

His reputation as a "liberation theologian" and commentator on the "Catholic Left" drew one of the largest crowds to attend a Baccalaureate Service in recent years. The Principal, the AMS President, and the University Chaplain, the Rev. Dr. A.M. Laverty, shared the Grant Hall service.

The Baccalaureate Service honours the graduates in all Faculties. In earlier times it was held the Sunday following Convocation, but in recent years Convocation has been spread over several weekends to accommodate growing numbers of graduates, and now the Baccalaureate is scheduled in March, prior to final examinations.

Letter

Waterloo, Ont.

Dear Sir:

I have just been examining my ballots for the Trustees and University Council elections, and noticing something rather disquieting about many of the candidates. At least, I found it disquieting, and I'd be interested in your opinion and that of anybody else you care to ask.

The theory is that the mass of Queen's graduates elect some of their number to either the Board or the Council, two policy-making bodies of the university. Provision is also made for Trustees to be elected by the Councillors directly (and by other groups as well). In addition, there are provisions by which such groups as the Alumni Association and, more actively, the academic staff of the university have a voice in its management.

It seems to me that all these channels ought to be kept separate. At least three sorts of candidates who now run for these offices are in what seems to me to be a questionable position:

(a) Members of the University Council who ask that the alumni elect them to the Board. These Councillors can be elected to the Board by the Council, at its pleasure, and for them to be put there directly by the alumni makes the lines of responsibility unclear.

(b) Members of the university faculty and staff who run for office. These individuals are represented on the university Senate, which makes up half of the Council. In effect they thus have double representation; they might easily also get into a position where their interests as management and as employees conflict.

(c) Officers of the Alumni Association who run for office. I realize that association officers do not ex officio join the Council or any other major body, but they do have a major voice in university policy already.

There are several other conflicts of this kind which are possible, but not (so far as I can tell) represented on this ballot. They include (a) post-graduate students who are also alumni and are entitled to representation in both capacities; (b) university staff holding office in the Alumni Association; (c) university staff acting also as staff to the University Council—indeed, I notice that one of the ballots is signed by Vice-Principal Jim Courtright "wearing another hat."

By making these observations I do not intend any reflection on individuals. The members of the Council and Board have done very well by Queen's in recent years. But leaving open so many possibilities for conflicts seems to me potentially dangerous some time in the future.

$176,000
(Feb. 15)

WE'RE NEARLY THERE!

Since the November progress report, the Annual Fund has reached $176,000. Of particular interest is the heartening statistic that more than 800 of this year's 3,300 contributors have increased their gifts. These total more than $12,000.

There is still time for those who wish to help. The Fund closes April 30.

The Kingston Branch has been working hard at organizing a TELETHON on behalf of the Fund. Forty-five graduates and students have volunteered to phone 800 of their fellow Queen'smen in the Kingston area in a three-evening effort, March 5, 6 and 7. Watch the next issue for the results. In 1973-74 it is hoped that other Alumni Branches will plan TELETHONs as volunteer projects in support of the University.

Committees concerned with private giving

One of the recommendations made in the Alumni Association self-survey was formation of a widely representative Fund Committee. This has now been implemented. Committee meetings were held in December and February.

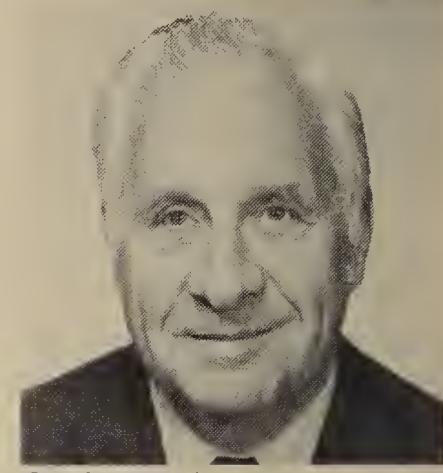

The Fund Committee is responsible to the Board of Directors of Queen's University Alumni Association. It will plan the annual Fund schedule, develop new programs and introduce additional measures designed to ensure an efficient and effective annual operation. The Chairman is Ray M. Bassett, B.A. LL.B., Toronto, General Supervisor of Estates and Trusts at Victoria and Grey Trust Company. Gordon P. Eligh, B. Com., manager of Simpson's-Sears in Kingston, is Vice-Chairman.

Committee members are:
Miss K. Segsworth, B.Com., LL.B.—Toronto
Mrs. H.I.J. Kellam, B.A.—Ottawa
G.O. Toller, B.A., M.Com.—Ottawa
D.J. Day, B.A.—Kingston
Mrs. A.E. Risk, B.Com.—Montreal
M.D. Rudiak, B.Com.—Montreal
W.G. Cunningham, B.A., Q.C.—Kingston
G.E. Perrin, B.A.—Ottawa
R.J. Kennedy, B.Sc., M.Sc.—Kingston
Gladys Heintz, M.A.—Toronto
H.J. Hamilton, B.A.—Kingston
M.A. Gill, B.Sc.—Kingston
E.E. Hurlbut, B.A.—Kingston.

In its planning to date the Committee has endorsed the concept of identifying specific projects, programs and areas of need at the University for which the support of graduates will be sought on an annual basis through the Alumni Fund.

Fund Council

The Board of Trustees recently established a special committee, the Queen's Fund Council, which will serve to formulate policy and give counsel on all means of private financial support for the University.

Some existing and possible private support programs the Council is already considering include wills and bequests, various types of deferred giving, parents' clubs, separate memorial funds for scholarships and bursaries, private research funds, capital campaigns and the Annual Alumni Fund.

First chairman of the Fund Council is L.G. Greenwood, Vice-Chairman of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, a member of the Board of Trustees, and national chairman of the current Queen's Capital Program. Other members are Dr. John J. Deutsch, J.D. Gibson, J.O. Hughes, K.R. MacGregor, Mrs. W.M. Benedickson, Ray M. Bassett, W.V. Moore, Douglas B. Annan and J.M. Courtright, Vice-Principal (Development and Information) and Council Secretary.

At the Branches

Robertson Davies Receives John Orr Award

There wasn't a long face in the house when Robertson Davies received the John Orr Award on February 22 in recognition of the honour he had brought to the University through his career as an author, playwright, and scholar. The laughs came thick and fast as the creator of Samuel Marchbanks gave a sparkling display of his erudition and wit.

The stage for the hilarious proceedings was set by an old friend, Arnold Edinborough, one-time member of the English Department at Queen's, former editor of Saturday Night, freelance writer and bon vivant, and no mean quipster himself, who introduced Mr. Davies.

Mr. Davies is Master of Massey College, graduate college of the University of Toronto, Companion of the Order of Canada, author of six novels, eight long plays and many short plays, two books of essays, four books of criticism, and an introduction to Shakespeare for use in schools.

The presentation was made in the Essex Room of Toronto's Sheraton Four Seasons Hotel, and took the new format of a reception and cocktail party. It made for a most enjoyable evening.

The president of the Branch, Peter Hayden, served as master of ceremonies.

IN SPRING — a young man's fancy turns to one of Queen's newest, riskiest traditions. See 'Play It Again, Sam' on page 62.

National President Presents Newfoundland Charter

As a finale to all of the planning and organizing involved in getting a new alumni group into action, the Newfoundland Branch held its Charter Night meeting in the Newfoundland Hotel in St. John's on Friday evening, January 26.

An enthusiastic gathering of more than 40 people enjoyed an excellent meal and witnessed the presentation of the official charter to Branch president Dr. Joe Josephson by George Perrin, president of the Alumni Association Board of Directors. Murray Gill, Alumni Field Secretary, spoke on the changing face of Queen's.

The newly elected Branch officers include Dr. J.E. Josephson, President, Mrs. Megan Nutbeam (Megan Moores), Vice President; Mrs. Alyce Sutherland (Alyce Casselman), Secretary; Mrs. Hope Papezik (Hope Ross), Treasurer; Dr. Sydney Breckon and Dr. Guy Brassard, Directors.

The Student of the Seventies—An Alumni Plus

"There are . . . some positive things going on in the seventies which ought to make alumni work more exciting and rewarding than it has ever been.

"The first of these plusses is that today's college students have the potential of becoming loyal and strongly supportive alumni. Despite all the factors which exist to confuse and dismay them, they are in the main as sharp and well informed and academically oriented as any generation of college kids I've known. Above all, we've never had on campuses—if my reading is at all accurate, and it is contrary to the public myth—students who are as fond of their alma maters as the present ones are. Critical as they may sound about shortcomings, impatient as they may be to throw off the last flimsy bonds of in loco parentis and to get a piece of the action of governance, most of them do find the closest thing to a spiritual home in their college or university."

Play it again, Sam

On the Old Ontario Strand, there comes that time when the ice breaks up, exams loom close, and that impractical urge to get away from it all sweeps over the campus.

In recent years, since the men's residences brought campus life virtually to the water's edge, this season has brought into full bloom the latent Huckleberry Finn in the men of Leonard Field.

These photos were taken in 1969, '70 and '71 from the promenade on King St. W. by land-bound admirers of what appears to be a growing Queen's tradition.

A milestone was reached on April 30, 1973, when the Alumni Fund total exceeded $200,000 for the first time. Much of the credit must go to the 935 graduates who increased their gifts this year by $13,500. A successful TELETHON sponsored by the Kingston Branch of the Alumni Association resulted in an additional $2,240.

Of the Fund total, the sum of $106,700 was unrestricted. This amount was allocated by the Board of Trustees to meet immediate needs in a number of areas including:

Consolidated Awards Fund	Applied Science — equipment
Department of Music	Medical Research
Libraries	Physical Education Centre
Student Health Office	The Agnes Etherington Art Centre

The remaining $95,430 was applied to numerous specific funds, programs, etc., as designated by the donors. Some of these are:

Alvin Craig Ross Memorial Scholarship	Faculty of Medicine
Medical Research	A. William and Austin Friend Visiting Professorship
Mining Engineering	The Agnes Etherington Art Centre
Continuing Education	The Chaplain's Trust Fund
The Muriel Driver Memorial

Prior to the opening of the 1972/73 Alumni Fund, 378 graduates and friends contributed $19,580. This amount was received during the period of transition to the University fiscal year and is not shown in the above totals.

The 73/74 Annual Alumni Fund opened officially on May 1. The Alumni Fund Committee is considering several new programs, each of which has an objective of increased communication with the graduate body and a higher rate of participation in the Fund.

Commenting on recent government policies affecting aid to universities and students, Principal John J. Deutsch said: "In real terms, the University's income is decreasing. While self-imposed budget restrictions will help, Queen's needs the support of her graduates and friends more than ever before to maintain her distinctive qualities and tradition of excellence in education.

"To all those who support the Alumni Fund so faithfully, may I say that Queen's is deeply grateful."

You've Come

A Long Way,

Baby

At the suggestion of the editor, Miss Ethel Ostrom, Arts '05, wrote for the Review her recollections of the first years of Queen's residences. She calls them "some memories grave and gay of that early time, and of two most honorable women, Miss Jane Drummond and Miss Alice Chown, who left their imprint on it."

Miss Drummond was Matron (1901-03) of the first two women's residences — 54 William St. and Maplehurst at 174 Earl St. Her father had been a banker-advisor to Lord Stanley of Preston, Governor General of Canada, 1888-93, and from her father she must have inherited some sort of financial wizardry to have balanced the residence budget on our weekly board money, which averaged for each of us less than $4.00.

Of necessity, our fare was frugal; our most usual dinner was boiled mutton (always with a flourish of caper sauce on top), followed next day by shepherd's pie, with scotch broth for lunch. And I, for one, learned a downright good lesson about dignity, simplicity and truth when, on the red-letter night we had Principal Grant to dinner, the dinner was boiled mutton.

Each evening after dinner we withdrew to the drawing room where Miss Drummond poured cocoa, and whatever amount of cocoa went into the beverage, there was never a shortage of good milk. We might long at times for this or that, but the constant good health of every one of us proved that we had no need of anything we did not get. (Though three of us went down with typhoid during the epidemic of 1903, the fault was the city's and not Miss Drummond's.)

The episode of the rats proved Miss Drummond to be wonderfully resourceful, too. Shortly after we moved into Maplehurst, some rats found out that pickings were to be had in the wastebaskets in the various rooms. One night the whole upper hall was awakened by shrieks and shrieks and shrieks from the south front bedroom where we found one of the girls sitting on her feet in the middle of her bed and as white as the sheets with which she had swathed herself, round and round, as armor. A rat had been jumping here and there, over table, over chairs! Had mounted the door-knob and glared at her! Was still in the room!

OW! The thing jumped from nowhere and hid behind the bookshelves.

That set an uproarious rat hunt going. The slamming of doors, the thwacking of umbrella handles, screams and screeches and squeals brought Miss Drummond hastily up to investigate, but as it seemed she could do nothing to calm down the hunt, she beat a hasty retreat back down again, soon to be visited by a triumphant warrior (Glengarry forever and stand fast for Craigellachie!) proudly holding a dead rat by the tail.

Next morning Miss Drummond promptly dealt with the situation, not by traps or poison, but by humanely stuffing all the access holes around the radiators with wads of paper containing generous amounts of cayenne pepper. Not a rat was seen around the place "for seven years after," I was told.

But the things we admired most about Miss Drummond were her dignity, her high principles, her earnest desire that we should carry with honour our own name and that of Queen's — and be duly grateful to the Residence Committee for what they were trying to do for Queen's women.

One member of this Committee was the tall Miss Alice Chown, sister of "G.Y.", the helpful, efficient registrar of Queen's. Miss Chown was the liaison officer between the Committee and us, and visited us often. Intensity was her chief characteristic. How she laboured as against an impenetrable wall to get the message of culture and its "royal mines" through to our slumbering souls! She knew the mighty bards, the great painters, and we felt the art galleries of Europe were her banqueting halls and Athens, Tyre and Balbec her recreation grounds. One day she revealed her heart's desire and prayer for us: that the day would come when we would reach such a level of culture that we "would rather gaze at a beautiful picture than eat a good dinner."

(That very night the residence slogan, E-Rut-Luc, was born, to be throttled within a week by the medicos' vulgar parody, "Hen Coop, Hen Coop, Cluck, Cluck, Cluck!"")

What Miss Chown did the very next day brought to light another of her strong characteristics. She sent us a large glass jar of ginger pear jam (beautiful amber in colour) made by herself in her own kitchen. And a more delicious jam was never made by anyone else, ever.

Now it may have chanced once or twice in after days that some of us, mooning over a favourite picture, have let the soup boil over in the kitchen or the kettle boil dry, but the times when we have titillated our palates with ginger pear jam, made according to Miss Chown's own recipe, are countless.

Their works do follow them. We were fortunate to have been exposed, so young, to the influence of these two splendid women.

Following Miss Ostrom's lead, the Review went back into its files to select these further glimpses of life in the women's residences over the years. As the TV commercial keeps saying, "You've come a long way, baby!"

New Regulations for Women Students by Hilda C. Laird, Dean of Women

... For the women especially, training for freedom is desirable. It has therefore been arranged for first-year students to live in residence (Ban Righ Hall) under supervision and bound by rather strict regulations,

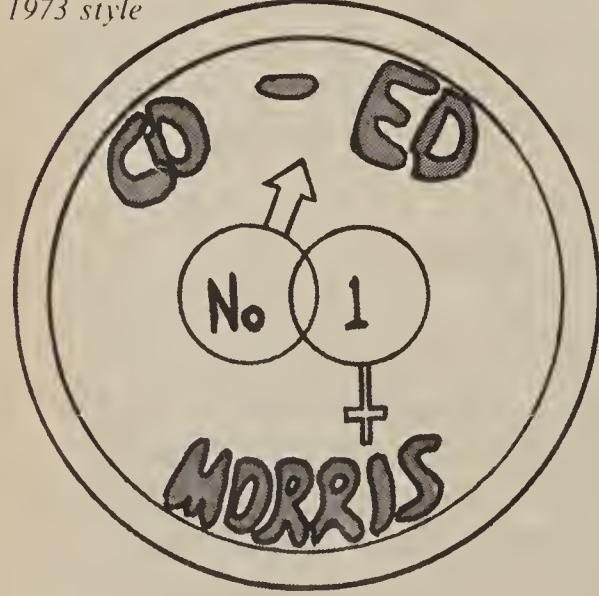

Avonmore, the mid '20's: "Some of the kids taken last Fall on the Sunday after one of the big rugby matches."

Richardson Stadium, the late '50's: "Some of the kids taken last Fall on Saturday before one of the big football games"

whereas a majority of the older students will be in supervised lodging-houses and will enjoy greater freedom. In other words, the butterfly will henceforth emerge more slowly from the chrysalis and grow accustomed gradually to the intoxicating fresh air of college.

All first-year students must be in residence by 10.15 every evening except when late leave has been obtained from the Dean. . . . First-year students will be granted one late leave each week. The regular limit of late leave is 11 o'clock on Sundays and 12.30 during the week. . . . First-year students may be given additional late leaves until 11 or 11.30 for lectures, concerts and theatres at the discretion of the Dean.

As for lodging-houses, all landladies are to send to the Dean of Women a weekly report on the printed form showing the approximate hour at which each student has returned each evening.

Women students may not live in houses in which men students are living or in which any men are lodging.

Women students will not be allowed to live alone together in furnished apartments or flats.

The testing time for this new system is at hand. . . . With the keen intuition of the young they will soon sense that the régime is, after all, a beneficent maternalism.

From the Queen's Journal, January 29, 1935.

Big Rats Prevalent in Levana's Early Days

Old records in Ban Righ Hall have come to light recently, revealing amusing incidents and customs of residence life at Queen's.

Thirty years ago boarders were called by the rather unattractive name of "mealers" and had to work for their food, for French and German were spoken at dinner on alternative nights. You can imagine the quiet that prevailed at meals.

The rats became so numerous that the girls took stringent means to abolish them. They ran to earth all but one, apparently the oldest inhabitant, who wouldn't leave under any circumstances.

The Fire Committee was warned to be on the alert for smoke — tobacco or other. Apparently they were expected to assume the duties of a morality squad. Five years later the duties of the Fire Committee are further described. They were to awaken the freshettes and teach them how to make a graceful exit in time of fire.

The freshies were squashed in the 1910's just as they are now. Some of their regulations were that a freshette be appointed to watch each rathole; no freshie could wear a hat more than a yard wide; no freshette could have crush on Professor M.; no freshette was allowed to take first-class honours in all her work in the Spring.

Bath nights were carefully regulated. A bath list was prepared, allowing the girls two baths a week. Some of the complaints lodged then were against the hardness and scarcity of the toast, the boiled mutton, the quantity of pepper in the food, the flies in the milk and the dirtiness of the rooms. We have our troubles now, but they do not measure up to those.

... Open hours were first granted to Queen's women last year, when they were allowed to have male visitors Sunday afternoons and evenings, and these hours worked so well that an extension of the privilege was made possible. The hours from 9.00 - 2.00 Fridays and Saturdays were the choice of over 50 percent of the girls who voted for the extension.

They're taking all the fun out of living in women's residences.

That old maximum security prison atmosphere is gone. Gone the house mother to watch over you. Gone the 11 p.m. curfew which often necessitated re-entering late at night via someone's window.

No rules about dress in the dining room. No rules about signing out when you leave the residence. No rules against men in the residence. The women's residences at Queen's have few rules and regulations — just those dictated by common sense and consideration for others. And they're made by the students.

... There are no strictly enforced rules about drinking in residence. "We abide by the law, but we don't hound the girls," says Dean Bryce. "... I'd hate to see the rule spelled out. ... Let us not have a rule that we can't enforce."

All agreed that drugs have been no problem.

September 1972

The Scots who started Queen's University as a training ground for gentlemen wanting to become Presbyterian ministers are turning in their graves today. One hundred and thirty years later, a residence behind the ivy walls is going co-ed.

Morris Hall opened its doors over the weekend to 113 freshmen and 68 upper classmen, both men and women. It marks the first residence in Kingston to follow the lead on campuses all over North America to integrate student living quarters. Student co-operatives (Science '44 Co-ops), however, have been co-ed for some time.

... Morris Hall has 181 beds, some in single rooms, others in double. Men and women students live beside each other, with alternate rooms being occupied by the same sex. Washrooms are segregated; all common rooms, with tables, refrigerators and cooking implements, are integrated.

And the waiting list for Morris Hall is a long one.

THE UNIVERSITIES TODAY AND TOMORROW

A few weeks ago, Al Capp was on the Queen's University campus to take part in a debate with students. When he was challenged to answer a particularly searching question, he replied, "I am no longer young enough to know everything." Among that rapidly changing breed, the university presidents, I find I am already becoming something of a veteran and that I am no longer young enough to know everything about universities. However, I believe that universities are and will continue to be vitally important to the people of this country.

During the past 10 or 12 years, no other institutions in our society have been called upon to cope with so many overwhelming demands and challenges as have the institutions of post-secondary education, especially the universities. There was the veritable explosion of numbers which called for a rate of expansion seldom faced by human organizations; there was the revolution in social attitudes and values which involved instant upheavals in goals, programs and modes of operation; there was the torrent of new knowledge which had to be accommodated and for which complex and costly technology such as the computer had to be provided; there was an insatiable search for answers and expertise to solve a growing load of human problems for which there were no instant solutions; and, as is so often the case, there was an unrealistic inflation of expectations which could not be accomplished.

In the face of these enormous challenges coming within so short a time, it is surely not surprising that there have been severe stresses and strains, imbalances, conflicts, sharp increases in costs, disappointments, and the need for reappraisal and a fresh look at the future.

At the beginning of the 1960's, when Ontario had about 6½ million people, there were hardly 40,000 full-time students in all institutions of post-secondary education; only one person out of 13 was in the 18-24 age group. At the beginning of the 1970's, this number had multiplied almost four-and-a-half times. In the very short space of ten years, attendance had risen to one out of every five in the 18-24 age group. Earlier the total cost was counted, but in the tens of millions; now it has reached the range of seven to eight hundred millions.

From a relatively minor factor in the provincial budget, it has become a large competitor with other claims on provincial resources. In one short decade post-secondary education has become a major matter of public policy. It has become such from the standpoint of educational philosophy, from the standpoint of human development, from the standpoint of our culture, and from the standpoint of taxation and public priorities.

What are some of the more significant issues to which we must now give particular attention as we go into the 1970's?

First of all, it is clear from the brief review I have given that we have, almost overnight, transformed post-secondary education from a small elite system to a system of mass education. This has been a profound change—much more than the mere increase in numbers or the appearance of large campuses. The elite system under which most of our historic institutions have developed was dedicated to the preparation of entrants into the traditional learned professions and to the education of leaders for the church, for the state and, to a limited extent, for business. True, there were always some from the middle and affluent classes who used the university primarily as a finishing school to spend a few pleasant years acquiring social graces, friendships, and perhaps a little culture before beginning the serious business of life. However, the numbers were never massive. Under the basically elite system of the past, attendance was a privilege for which one accepted certain responsibilities, certain standards, certain values, and certain restraints. From the standpoint of both the institution and the student, it was essentially a private and non-governmental affair. Under the system of mass education which we have now, attendance has become virtually a right. Furthermore, it has become a right which young people are urged to exercise under many forms of public pressure. In these circumstances, there is a basic change in the respective obligations of the individual and the state. The government takes on a large new weight of responsibility, and higher education becomes a vast public enterprise. At the same time, many of the students come with a very different and a very diverse set of purposes and expectations.

Already, before the new decade of the '70's has hardly begun, it has become evident that many in the massive student body in the universities are not achieving either their purposes or expectations. Suddenly, there has been a falling off in high school graduates going on to university. At the same time a considerable number already there have decided to drop out of their courses. As a result, university enrolments have flattened out and in some places have even declined while the size of the university age group in the population has continued to increase rapidly. What was wrong?

Students of the 1960's: "Some were there at the wrong time, some were there too long, and some should not have been there at all."

It appears that a considerable number of the new entrants to the universities were attracted there, or were urged to go there, by the prospect of assured jobs. When these did not develop, they lost interest. The higher values of education had little appeal in themselves. Some found the prolongation of sequential schooling as interfering too much with the desire to assume adult responsibilities and to be independent. Others found their courses too abstract, too specialized, too restrictive, and too detached from the immediate realities of life. Still others sought experience and worldly engagement rather than the development of their intellectual abilities.

Jerome Bruner, writing in the Times Educational Supplement, has observed rather aptly that "the decision to delay vocational or job decisions until comparatively late in the life cycle inevitably makes fuzzy one's definition of oneself as an adult. At the very moment the young man or woman is seeking authenticity, the only legitimate role that is open to him is that of student. Youth culture becomes more deeply entrenched, more prolonged, more ideologically in opposition. . . ."

At the end of the 1960's, it appears that the great explosion in numbers at the universities included some who were there at the wrong time, some who were there too long and some who should not have been there at all. This does not mean in this age of high technology and specialization that advanced education, training and development of skills are not required for almost the whole of the population; rather, it means that these needs cannot be met solely or even mainly by the universities with their emphasis on intellectual distinction and the development of new knowledge. In our modern society, we need a wide range of post-secondary institutions and many different ways of acquiring skills and avocations. Universities should be for those who seek scholarly excellence and high professional competence; we should have a variety of colleges and institutes for those who seek technical training and vocational skills; we should have suitable opportunities for those who wish to combine work and study; we should have facilities for continuing education throughout life; and we should have ready possibilities for innovation and new initiatives in teaching and learning. The universities should not be expected to be all things to all people. Theirs is a particular role. Surely this is one lesson we have learned out of the turmoil of the sixties.

A few years back the Government of Ontario took a most significant step in the establishment of the Colleges of Applied Arts and Technology. A basic recommendation of the recent report of the Commission on Post-Secondary Education calls for the further development of a diverse and more widely accessible system of post-secondary education for Ontario in the future. The underlying concept of the Commission is that the society of this province in the future will be a "learning society." In such a society, there should be available a wide range of institutions and facilities responsive to all the possibilities for human development—intellectual, vocational, artistic, and cultural. They should be accessible to everyone who can benefit from them—rich or poor, child or adult, male or female—and they should be available throughout life as an integral part of the world of work and living. In the future, whatever values people may have that are worthwhile and whatever they may wish to accomplish, their hopes and personal fulfillment must be based on knowledge, skill, and understanding. Nothing else will matter very much.

The Commission has pointed to the deficiencies which still exist in Ontario. Important groups in the population continue to lack adequate opportunities for post-secondary education: the native peoples, the French-speaking minority, citizens living in the smaller and remote locations, persons seeking part-time study or training while working, and so forth. The Commission has made specific recommendations to overcome these deficiencies, including such new initiatives as the Open Academy and the provision of means for experimental programs suited for specific local needs. Not everything can be accomplished over night but I would hope continued progress will be made to bring about a greater equality of opportunity for the immensely varied needs of a large, widely dispersed pluralistic society.

“How is adequate accountability to be achieved while allowing the universities freedom from the deadening hand of bureaucracy and the capricious will of politics?”

Let me now turn to another far-reaching outcome of the explosive sixties, namely the enormous growth in the role of government in higher education. The implications of this for the future are immense—particularly with regard to universities. When I first entered university administration in this province not so long ago, the government handed out with a benevolent hand a few round millions of dollars among a few relatively small institutions and hardly a question was asked. Today, when almost half a billion dollars of taxpayers' money is distributed to a large number of institutions, we hear the shrill cry of accountability. That is inevitable when such large sums of money are involved which compete with other insistent demands. In government, accountability normally means bureaucratic controls. That is the way the system works. On the other hand, universities must have a high degree of independence in order to achieve their purposes and in order to serve society properly. Here is the great dilemma of large-scale government involvement. How is adequate accountability to be achieved while allowing the universities freedom from intervention, both from the deadening hand of bureaucracy and the capricious will of politics? Over the years, governments of Ontario have recognized this problem and have tried to cope with it in a constructive way. Indeed, Ontario has been a pioneer and leader on this continent in this endeavour. However, in recent years, the dilemma has become much more difficult as the financial problem has increased. Now we face the urgent need to make new decisions for the future.

The issue of accountability and autonomy involves much more than financing. The universities play an essential role in helping to maintain the vitality of a free society. They do this by providing the conditions and the means by which scholars and students are able to examine, analyze and criticize the operations and the goals of society, and to carry on the search for truth wherever it leads, without fear of reprisal. By this process, society acquires the ability to adjust to change and to accomplish reform without which it would not remain for long either free or just. In this role, the universities are never popular. They cannot be and should not be expected to be merely popular institutions. Among some of my friends in the world of business and the labour unions, the word "professor" is not a word of endearment—it is often uttered with disapproval and sometimes with ridicule. The universities are expected to be dedicated to the search for truth. Josh Billings observed long ago that "the supply of truth is always greatly in excess of the demand for it." On the other hand, those who search for truth must themselves be subject to assessment and constant criticism. For all these reasons it is very important to a healthy society that the university be protected from both political and bureaucratic disapproval or control of its intellectual commitments. This should not be confused with the capacity to run practical affairs, whether private or public. Someone once said he would sooner be governed by the first 2,000 persons named in the Boston telephone book than by the entire faculty of Harvard. This is undoubtedly a wise observation, but it has nothing to do with the issues I have been discussing.

“As Josh Billings observed, the supply of truth is always greatly in excess of the demand for it.”

The very large role of governments in higher education has brought to the fore another matter of concern regarding the proper functioning of universities. In this era of large government, we have become aware of what appears to be an inherent feature of this state of affairs, namely the strong tendency to undertake programmes in great surges followed by equally sudden reversals. It seems to be extremely difficult to achieve balanced longer-term planning. We are now familiar with what are known as stop-go policies. Not surprisingly, the universities, along with other things, have been subjected quite strongly to this phenomenon. At the beginning of the 1960's, education in general, and university education in particular, was accorded a very high priority. A sudden and huge expansion was undertaken. Education was the Cinderella. Universities were admired institutions which would bring solutions to every social, human and economic problem. Clearly, there was an urgent need at that time to raise the priority and to expand our efforts substantially. I myself did my best to help bring this about. However, the expectations were greatly exaggerated, and the rate of increase in expenditures during some of those years was clearly excessive.

As we entered the 1970's, there was a sharp reversal. All the lights flashed "stop". Education in general and universities in particular were, after all, not so important. Suddenly there appeared a growing stream of slide-rule calculations which purported to prove that education was hardly worth the money that was being spent on it. Within the narrow blinders of cost-benefit analysis, which is the style of the times, it was portrayed that the discounted cash flow was deficient, as if that meant very much. At any rate, during recent years, the resources made available to universities have not kept pace with the unavoidable increases in prices and costs during this inflationary period, and real resources in relation to their operations have declined significantly. Universities with their commitment to patient scholarship and excellence, and with their heavy overheads of highly specialized talent and equipment, cannot operate effectively or efficiently under a system of stop-go, involving sudden rapid expansion and equally sudden restraint. By their very nature, universities need a more stable basis for planning and development.

Whatever shortcomings there were during the period of explosive growth in the 1960's, the province of Ontario succeeded in this short space of time in bringing about a major transformation in its university system. It was brought from an under-developed and, in many respects, almost colonial state to a level much more appropriate for an advanced modern society. Here I am reminded of the story about the old alumnus, who, after many years, returned to a class reunion at Princeton University. He became very dejected. When his classmates noticed this, they asked him what was the matter. He replied, "They have made a university out of my dear little alma mater." Well, a number of dear little alma maters in Ontario have grown into institutions of higher learning which, in the quality and the range of their scholars and academic resources, now compare favourably by international standards. The people of Ontario can be proud of this. It is important that this accomplishment, achieved by a very heavy public investment, not be jeopardized by stop-go policies.

Let us look at the case of graduate studies. At the beginning of the 1960's, our facilities for graduate studies were woefully small. Graduates were numbered in the few hundreds, yet the faculty which had to be engaged for the rapid growth in student enrolment numbered in the thousands every year. There was no way in which this requirement could have been filled from our Canadian graduate schools. We had to draw heavily on foreign manpower as we did in the 1950's for our requirements of professional skills. Graduate schools in Ontario have expanded very rapidly, in certain respects too rapidly, but we are still not over our problem. Serious deficiencies continue to exist in certain

"The universities should not be expected to be all things to all people."

sensitive areas, particularly in the social sciences. There are few things over which we spend more time at my university than in the search for qualified Canadians to fill senior posts. In spite of all our efforts, we succeed less often than I would like to see, for the simple reason that they are not available. However, under the restraints of recent years, we are in danger of frustrating reasonable development, a result which would land us in further trouble a few years from now. If we are really serious that Canadians should fill an adequate proportion of academic posts in all fields, then we must be prepared to carry out longer-range, meaningful efforts in graduate studies and research and not simply apply sudden and arbitrary methods of control which are being advocated in some quarters.

I have given a number of what I am convinced are cogent reasons why the relationships between universities and governments should be regarded as being of a special nature. Of course, when universities receive massive support from governments, they must be accountable. However, this responsibility should be carried out in a way which avoids the usual bureaucratic procedures, which does not inhibit the university in its role as the fearless seeker after truth and the critic of society, and which provides also a reasonably stable basis for longer-range planning so essential for the attainment of high quality.

In order to achieve these purposes more fully in the future, the Commission on Post-Secondary Education has proposed the establishment of a buffer between the government and the universities in the form of a Council for University Affairs. This council would be vested with the planning and executive functions essential for the achievement of public accountability, but would be removed from the normal machinery of government and from the exigencies of short-run policies and politics. I hope that this important recommendation will be adopted, upsetting as it may be to the existing arrangements, because it can have very large implications for the years ahead. In the past we have been very fortunate in Ontario, but the problems and the dangers of the future are much more menacing.

When very large resources are expended on higher education, it is pertinent to ask who pays and who benefits. At the beginning of the 1960's, the Government of Ontario stated its purposes very clearly. In 1959, the then Provincial Treasurer told the Legislature, "Our objective is to ensure that no student who has the capacity will be deprived of the opportunity of attending university and developing his talents to the fullest extent." It was accepted that the government would assume a much larger responsibility in order to achieve this objective. In 1965, Premier Robarts told the Legislature that "we must provide whatever opportunities are necessary as a government so that each individual may be assured an opportunity through education to develop his potentialities to the fullest degree."

In order to carry out this policy, the government assumed a rising proportion of the sharply increasing expenditures for both operations and capital facilities. The share of the burden falling on the students and private giving was substantially reduced. The rate of increase in government outlays on higher education in Ontario was among the highest in Canada. Indeed, during the latter half of the decade, the exponential growth rate was so large that it could not be continued, and there had to be a slowing down and a reassessment of what was being done. Today the share of the total direct costs carried by the government is in the order of 90 percent. However, this does not include the cost of room and board or foregone earnings which fall upon the student or his parents. These two items constitute a significant proportion of the overall cost of higher education.

In order to remove the obstacles arising from these costs, the government developed a program of student aid consisting of a mixture of grants and loans. Substantial amounts of government money also have been invested in post-secondary education in this way. We must now ask whether the investment of all these public resources has achieved the objective "that each individual may be assured an opportunity through education to develop his potentialities to the fullest degree." Our recent surveys and studies show that this particular objective has been attained only in part. The massive increase in university enrolments has come largely from the professional, managerial and from the middle and upper income groups in society. Those from the lower income groups and the lower income communities are still weakly represented. The Commission on Post-Secondary Education found that, "unfortunately, in Ontario many with ability still do not have access to post-secondary education."

In the light of this experience, what can we say about equity? When large amounts of taxpayers' money are being used, this question must be asked. Mr. Arthur Smith, former Chairman of the Economic Council, in a recent speech made this observation: "A few years ago. . . on a brief investigation of this question at the Economic Council of Canada, it was not without some consternation that I discovered that close to 70 percent of the tax base for financing university education. . . was being borne by individuals. . . who, on the average, had after-tax wage or salary incomes of less than $150 per week, while obviously many of those deriving the advantage of higher education would have average annual earnings in high skill, professional or managerial occupations in their lifetimes of many times $10,000. . . It is hardly appropriate that the 'relatively poor' of today should be placed under considerable pressure to finance the 'relatively rich of the next generation,' particularly if this is being done through an enforced system of general taxation." Other studies bear out this observation that the present system is regressive and that it raises large questions about equity.

If we are to be more effective in the direction of equality of opportunity and of equity among the various income groups in our society, we must take another look at our system of financing post-secondary education. The Commission on Post-Secondary Education has done just that. It has concluded that it should recommend important changes in that system. The Commission has proposed, among other things, that relatively more of the public financing should be devoted to student aid, particularly in the direction of the lower income groups, by means of more adequate grants graduated according to income. It would follow that a relatively smaller proportion would be devoted to general support. Of course, financing alone cannot solve all the problems of equality and equity. Sociological, hereditary and environmental factors are very important. However, to the extent that financial obstacles continue to exist, we should seek to remove them in the future if we are serious about equality of opportunity and justice.

Finally, I must refer, if only very briefly, to another set of developments which have had a profound influence on the universities. I doubt that there has ever been a time in history when changes in attitudes have been so rapid—changes regarding such basic matters as the family, religion, sex, drugs, and authority generally. It is not surprising that these changes have had their most pervasive effects on the young people, especially the young people in the universities. The changes in life styles and values which have resulted have had a very large impact on the university itself as an institution. Traditionally the university stood in place of the parent—in loco parentis—exercising in some measure a parental guiding hand during a difficult period of transition to full adulthood. In a very short space of time, this has all been swept away—but this change has not been accepted fully either by the parents or by the community at large. Frequently, the universities are expected to exercise authority over behaviour and attitudes when they can no longer do so. The law itself has proclaimed that its young members are full citizens.

The changes in attitude toward authority and toward hierarchical systems have brought large pressures for new governing structures at universities—structures which provide for what is called 'participatory democracy.' The university with its natural attachment to tradition, to the continuity of culture and to the maintenance of standards is inherently a rigid and slow moving institution. The difficulties ensuing from these rigidities have been compounded by a growing anxiety of how the university can maintain its quality and its intellectual values in a period of such explosive change. These difficulties have provided a lot of drama for the various news media and for the public, but they represent a real dilemma and are likely to be with us for some time.

While trying to cope with these problems of change, the universities have been living in a climate of what I have already described as excessive expectations. During the 50's and 60's, education, including higher education, was widely expected to provide solutions to such basic problems as persistent poverty, general unemployment, discrimination, and alienation. It is now being realized that education is only one and a limited factor in the development of answers to such deep-seated problems.

However, now we are in danger of an unreasonable and irrational backlash against education itself. We hear slogans such as "schools don't matter," "schools make no difference," "de-schooling society," "universities are the instruments of meritocracy," and so forth. This is nonsense. True, schools and education cannot by themselves ensure equality and justice, but they are a powerful means for achieving equality of opportunity for those who have the desire, the will and the ability to take advantage of them. Schools and education, including higher education, cannot do more than that—but that is very important.

In this highly complex age, no society can continue to be viable, nor can it foster a great culture, without a strong intellectual and scholarly base. Canadians now wish to play a larger part in providing such a base for themselves. Our universities, with all their faults and with all their difficulties, deserve your careful concern and your support. In spite of all the change about which I have spoken, Whitehead's warning is still true: "In conditions of modern life the rule is absolute: the race which does not value trained intelligence is doomed."

Farewell the Ivory Tower

Universities in Transition

J. A. Corry

The addresses here collected record "one person's reflections on varied aspects of the rapid growth and unresting change in Canadian universities in the sixties." The fact that the "one person" was J. A. Corry, former Principal of Queen's University (Kingston, Ontario) and head of the two organizations now amalgamated as the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, stamps these addresses with the wisdom and authority of a reflective, lively, and seasoned mind. In his inaugural address as Principal, Dr. Corry set forth his own educational ideals and with uncanny prescience pointed to many of the aspects of higher education which would command increasing attention and anxious concern in the decades to come. In each of the 12 subsequent addresses he deals with salient problems as they come into prominence — problems of university autonomy under government financial control, of faculty and student unrest, of co-operation in graduate studies, of settling priorities, of the primacy of effective undergraduate teaching, and of the changing structure of university government.

Dean Reid Brings A Message From Mao

Chairman Mao has a simple saying that suffragette Emily Pankhurst would have given all her chains and banners to hear: "Women hold up half the sky."

Along with a Red Chinese flag, a stack of bright propaganda posters, profusely illustrated books, and an acupuncture cure for migraine headaches, Mao's philosophy is one of the souvenirs brought back from the People's Republic of China by Queen's Dean of Women, Evelyn Reid.

Mrs. Reid toured China for three weeks in March, travelling from Peking in the north to Canton in the south and east to Shanghai and Hangchow. She was part of a 15-woman study group organized by the Department of Continuing Education at the University of British Columbia. Their ages ranged from under 30 to over 70, and all were professional women wanting to meet their Chinese counterparts—professors, administrators, health officers, etc. Two women met the Canadians when they walked across the border into Peking (no vehicles are allowed to cross) and went with them as guides and interpreters as they visited universities, hospitals, museums, clinics, communes, neighborhoods and factories.

Dean Reid says she doesn't see "any point in discussing China in a negative way," because the country is moving ahead so impressively on so many social fronts. "They have certainly raised the floor for 800 million people." She was impressed with the health of the people, with their purposefulness, and with the fact that everyone had a job and knew what it was. By way of example, she cited three of the national goals—full integration of women, birth control and teaching the nation to be diligent. Any one of these would be difficult to achieve in our society, and yet China is making great strides in all three at once.

Education is one of Dean Reid's favorite Chinese subjects. Verbal communication on a national scale is extremely difficult there because all of China's 50 "mini-nations" have their own dialects and sub-dialects. However, there is only one written language in the country, and so education is patterned by the need for the written word and other visual communication. Thousands of posters and blackboards on streets, in doorways, in factories and institutions instill the teachings of Marx, Engels, Lenin and Mao, and encourage the imitation of the nation's heroes, including the late Dr. Norman Bethune, the Canadian best known to the Chinese. The story of Dr. Bethune's development of military hospital techniques is a proud chapter in the history of the New China. The people are taught both technology and pride through the media of graphic arts, sculpture and dance. Dean Reid learned that there are cultural committees in large industrial plants, for example, and saw a ballet performed by the workers of a fibre factory.

She also noted the accelerated teaching of languages, particularly English, Russian and Japanese, currently the languages of commerce. Even where professional interpreters are available, it is the practice for language students to be used as translators for visitors to universities. For on-the-job training, these students often work during evening hours at the Friendship Stores operated for foreign customers.

She recalls her visit as a long series of "lovely personal experiences," especially with her group's Chinese counterparts. The people they met were surprised and interested that a group of North American women would be travelling with no men to oversee and help them. They were also surprised to hear of such things as electric toothbrushes. When this subject arose, the Chinese found it hilarious. The visitors went on then to describe other electrical and automatic goods found in Canadian households—can openers, hair dryers, vibrators, egg beaters, pocket computers, etc.—and the Chinese reaction became more and more incredulous as images of their most pampered delicacy were called up. Finally the pronouncement came: "You all sound like Peking ducks!"

Mrs. Reid is still sorting out her experiences in China and may have a few pronouncements of her own to make as she helps show a generation of Queen's women how to hold up their half of the sky.

Tercentenary Boom in Books

Tercentenary seems to have brought with it a literary flowering in Kingston, and many Queen's personnel have been active in the renaissance. One of the most interesting of the many publications appearing is Kingston 300: A Social Snapshot, written by Kingstonians about the city and its people. This tercentennial project, fostered by a small editorial committee, reflects—through 80 articles—the life of Kingston yesterday, today and tomorrow.

Sections of the book deal with Kingston's location, history, inhabitants, education, culture and entertainment, health, social services, law enforcement, politics, earning a living, transportation, and prospects for the future, looking toward 2073. Long-time residents, immigrants, students, and many other groups and individuals have contributed views about particular facets of the city.

Kingston 300: A Social Snapshot is the brainchild of Dr. George Betts of the Institute of Local Government at Queen's. He had been involved in a similar publication to celebrate the centenary of Wellington, New Zealand. An editorial committee, including Anne Carswell of the Institute of Local Government, student Bryan Olney, and Mrs. Anne MacDermaid and Ian Wilson of the University Archives, formed almost spontaneously. The committee solicited contributions from a wide variety of people, both representative and non-representative, and the response was enthusiastic. Artist David Holmes volunteered his talents to design the book and contributed 20 drawings of Kingston scenes, ranging through the cover piece of City Hall, tugs in the harbour, a sketch of Grant Hall and a sunlit view of the marketplace.

The committee received articles of interest from such persons as Principal John J. Deutsch, examining Queen's ties with the City; Dr. Arthur R.M. Lower, discussing what a Kingstonian is; Alan Broadbent, Rector from 1969 to 1972, reminiscing on being a student at Queen's; Ray Stemp, still a student, describing Elrond College and new lifestyles; and Herb Hamilton, recalling the life and times of Queen's Alfie Pierce. The memories, anecdotes and reflections of many other contributors provide, in their own way, a fuller understanding of the relations of the University with the city and the larger community.

The publication of this book is a non-profit venture made possible through the sponsorship of the Royal Bank of Canada. Any profits will go to Kingston charities as a tercentennial gesture by the editorial committee and the contributors.

JOB BANK

A COMMUNITY PROJECT
(subsidiary of the Alma Mater Society)

What is JOB BANK?

It's a clearing house for students centred in Kingston who are capable of handling a wide variety of part-time, temporary or summer-long jobs. JOB BANK can supply anyone from a gardener to a computer programmer.

Why JOB BANK?

Students need money to come back to Queen's next fall. Employers can save time and money by employing help at student rates. And they'll do those odd jobs you've been putting off. Many JOB BANK students are willing to travel anywhere there's a summer job to be done.

How to use JOB BANK

JOB BANK can be reached by phone or mail. Give a description of the kind of work you want done. Rates may be arranged over the phone.

Ontario universities on 'slip-year' grants

Queen's and other Ontario universities are now operating on a revised grant system which has been dubbed "slip-year" financing. Jack McNie, Minister of Colleges and Universities, announced this spring that the new method, beginning 1973-74, will calculate operating grants using the enrolment level of the previous year, thereby allowing the universities a year to adjust to fluctuating attendance.

Under the "formula financing" of recent years, government grants were tied to student enrolment, with the result that rapid growth brought expanded revenue but steady or declining enrolment brought budgetary problems, since overheads of staff and equipment could not be altered rapidly.

The Minister has expressed the hope that "the introduction of the slip-year, combined with the present practice of announcing in advance the value of the Basic Income Unit for formula grants, will help our universities plan ahead with assurance of provincial support."

A new Lower book

Dr. A.R.M. Lower, emeritus Professor of History and now 84, has published his fifteenth book—an economic and social analysis of the Canadian timber trade in the early 19th century. The book is called Great Britain's Woodyard. It was designed by Peter Dorn and published by McGill-Queen's University Press ($16.50).

Summer jobs bring higher fall enrolments

JOB BANK, the student-organized summer employment service, is well into its third season, under the auspices of the Alma Mater Society and with the backing of the University, the City of Kingston, the Engineering Society, the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society, the Chamber of Commerce, CKWS radio and the Kingston Whig-Standard. JOB BANK is being co-ordinated this year by Alan Coxwell, fourth-year Commerce, and Donna Hackett, third-year Arts.

JOB BANK had its earliest start this year—April 2—so that it was in full swing when most students finished their examinations on May 1. Even with the shorter season last year, JOB BANK found more than 900 jobs that earned salaries totalling $233,000. Employers used student help in a wide variety of positions, in business and around homes. Student labour cut lawns, weeded gardens, painted houses, programmed computers, kept books, held secretarial jobs, tended bars, waited on table, poured concrete, diapered babies and taught swimming, for example.

Alan Coxwell says many of the students are willing to travel anywhere they're offered a job that's more than part-time or short-term. And he's hoping that Queen's graduates will respond to the appeal of willing help at student rates. (See additional information page 81.)

Boost cancer research

A group of Queen's doctors has been awarded a total of $274,000 for research on cancer. The National Cancer Institute awarded $180,000 to researchers in Pathology, Biochemistry, Microbiology and Immunology. The other $94,000 was given by the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation to Dr. Charles Bird, Med. '56, and his colleagues to further their work on controlling cancer of the prostate gland.

RECORDS BROKEN AT COLOR NIGHT

Dave Whiteside, left, holds the Carson Trophy, named for former player, coach and all-time football builder, Dr. Orrin A. Carson, and awarded to the year's outstanding lineman. To his right is Gaels halfback Brian Warrender, who won the Jenkins Trophy as the final-year athlete who brought the most honour to Queen's athletically and academically. Kaiva Celdoma, a notable volleyball player, won the P.H.E. Class of '55 Alumnae Trophy, top award to a woman athlete-scholar. The first Ron Stewart physical education prize went to Gordon B. Taylor. The Principal noted at the Color Night Banquet in March that never in the history of Queen's had so many students participated in intercollegiate sports. About 450 golden Q's were presented to members and managers of football, hockey, basketball, soccer, wrestling, gymnastics, volleyball, waterpolo, swimming and track and field teams.

High-schoolers seeing Queen's a new way

The recent issuing of the guest card pictured above put visible approval on Queen's new approach to visits by high school students "shopping" for a university. The new program is a departure from the old style of campus visits by groups, usually accompanied by teachers. Secondary school students who are serious about choosing the right institution for their next level of education are encouraged to come on their own and stay a couple of days.

Their first stop is at the Student Affairs Centre, where they are briefed by liaison officer Finn Bogstad, Sc.'55, and presented with a 'travel kit'—a campus map, calendars of whichever faculties they're interested in, and timetables for classes they might want to audit. If the visitor wishes, interviews and appointments with specific professors and university officers are arranged. Then the student sets off on his own to get the feel of undergraduate life at Queen's.

"The philosophy of our program is to expose the University to the visitor on the basis of individual experience," Mr. Bogstad says. Queen's high school liaison officer, Bob Buller, Arts '72, adds that it's hard to gain a real appreciation of the University in a single day, and "so we encourage visitors to stay overnight and spend two days with us—preferably during the week—attending classes, talking to Queen's students and taking their meals in residence dining facilities." Some stay overnight on campus, some downtown in Elrond College, and others at city hotels that offer special rates for this program.

There have been some parental reservations about students missing school, but guidance counsellors are enthusiastic about the approach.

Generally declining enrolments have led to widespread reassessments of student recruiting methods at Ontario universities, but so far only Queen's and one other college have developed such an individualized approach.

Advice for small firms

Ten students from the School of Business are taking part in a program to offer consulting assistance to small businesses in Eastern Ontario.

The program began on May 1, under the sponsorship of the Ontario Ministry of Industry and Tourism and Imperial Oil Ltd. Low-cost consulting is available to any retail, manufacturing or service business which is locally owned by Canadians, preferably owner-operated and financially unable to hire advisors.

The 10 students taking part have completed their first year in the Master of Business Administration program and are considered by program director H.O. Helmers capable of counselling on cash management, costing systems and control, inventory control and production scheduling, marketing, distribution and promotion, accounting systems and computer needs.

Royal Bank Award for former Principal Corry

In April, Dr. James A. Corry, former Principal and Vice-Chancellor of Queen's and holder of the Order of Canada, was named winner of the prestigious Royal Bank Award for his "outstanding contribution to Canadian education." He is the seventh winner of the $50,000 award and the first educator selected since the prize was instituted in Centennial year.

The citation from the Royal Bank says that Dr. Corry "played a leading role in encouraging and developing responsible student government at a time of continent-wide student unrest. He also performed a vital advisory function in university/government relations during a period of unparalleled university expansion in Canada and increased government support."

Dr. Corry, now 73, retired from Queen's in 1968 after 32 years in which he had been professor, author, vice-principal, Dean of Law, and finally Principal and Vice-Chancellor (1961-68). In 1971 the McGill-Queen's University Press published 13 of Dr. Corry's addresses under the title Farewell the Ivory Tower: Universities in Transition.

His most recent national contribution was the 1972 report Quest for the Optimum, a study of the rationalization of university research, undertaken for the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada, widely known as the Bonneau-Corry Report. (See the January-February Review.)

What are his plans for what he describes as "a handsome, magnificent award"? His general plan is to pour it back into the system of higher education in which he has spent his life. "I want to use this money to promote and improve the university structure," he says. Among his plans are support for funds that "have been set up in memory of colleagues, some living and some now dead."

Montreal Medal presented to Padre Laverty

"For meritorious contribution to the honour of Queen's," the Rev. Dr. A.M. Laverty, University Chaplain, was the 1973 recipient of the Montreal Medal on April 28. The ceremony took place at the Beaconsfield Golf and Country Club with a record number in attendance.

In his acceptance speech, the Padre reviewed his experiences at Queen's over a quarter of a century. He paid tribute to the leadership and support of the four Principals under whom he had served—Drs. Wallace, Mackintosh, Corry and Deutsch.

He was cited for the medal by Herb Hamilton. John G. Chance, president of the Branch, served as chairman and presented the award, which was established in 1939. Mr. Chance paid tribute to the late Gordon R. Maybee, who had designed the medal.

Present for the happy occasion were Mrs. Laverty, who was given a corsage, and two daughters—Mrs. A.J. de Chastelain (Mary Ann Laverty), Arts '61, and Lea Laverty, Arts '70.

Padre Laverty regales Montreal alumni with tales of his 25 years on campus. At right, chairman John G. Chance.

Fun and Profit in March for Kingston Branch

With strong support from graduates and students, the Kingston Branch sponsored a most successful TELETHON, on March 5, 6 and 7. The site was Bell Canada's office on Princess Street. Each night from 6.30 till 9.00, nine graduates and four students manned the 'phones to establish contact with their fellow Queen'smen on behalf of the 1972-73 Annual Alumni Fund. Coffee and donuts sustained them in their efforts and $2,000 was added to the Fund total. The Branch is planning to make this an annual event.

The same week as the TELETHON, good wine, good cheese, good art and good company all combined to make the Alumni Wine and Cheese Tasting Party a complete success. It was held in the Agnes Etherington Art Centre on March 9. Tickets for the annual event were sold out well in advance, and a capacity crowd enjoyed the gourmet fare and admired an exhibition of Kurt Kranz paintings entitled "Retrospective Bauhaus and Today."

New Montreal Executive

The Montreal Branch elected its new Executive in April. President is D.C. MacLean, Arts '51. Past President is John G. Chance, Arts '49. Others elected are Mrs. O.C. Frood (Norah Cassidy), Arts '49, as Vice-President; I.D. Vessie, Sc. '38, as Treasurer, and D.J. Carty, Arts '68 as Secretary.

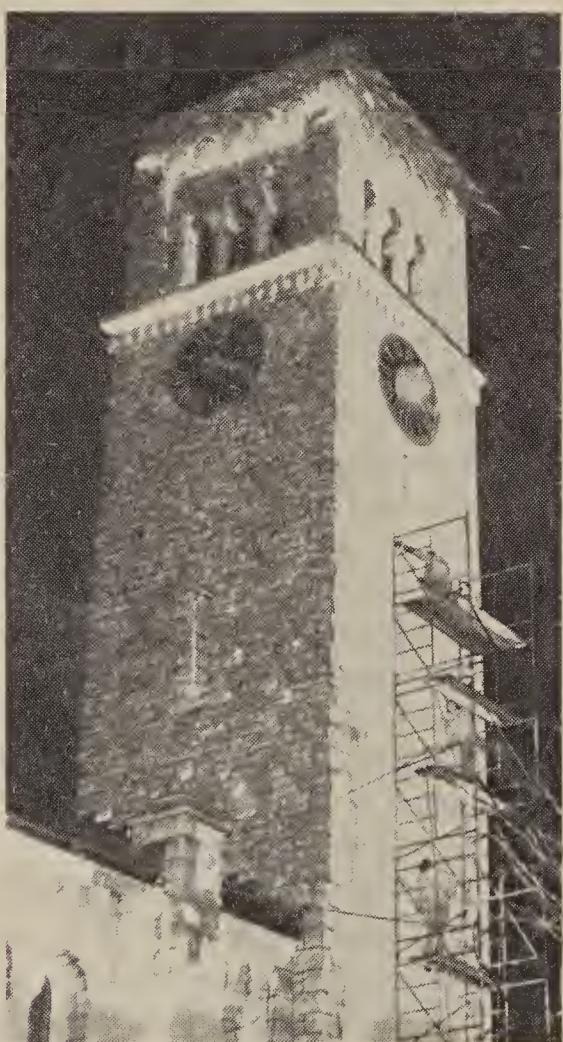

Directors for 1973-74 are Avron Cohen, Arts '44, Mrs. Cohen (Shirley), D.G. Burwash, Sc. '48, R.A. Johnston, Sc. 67, Walter McKee, Sc. 47, Keith G.L. McKey, B.Sc. '56, Mrs. H.E. Potter (Janet Cole), Arts '68, Mrs. W.A. Rogers (Barbara Green), Com. '46, Arts '48, and W.R. Sexsmith, Sc. '58.

APRIL FOOL!

"The Queen's engineer at his playful, creative best." That was the Principal's reaction to the Mickey Mouse clock that appeared on April 1 to add a little whimsy to the limestone dignity of Grant Hall tower. How did Mickey get past the ghost of Nathan Dupuis, who built the clock with his mathematics class seven decades ago? An intrepid Journal photographer braving a rainy night snapped these engineers doing their thing at 4.00 a.m. with the help of ropes and scaffolding.

Spring Dinner at Guelph

The annual Spring Dinner of the Guelph Branch was held on Wednesday, April 18, at the Amber Cupola Restaurant in Guelph. More than 50 graduates and friends enjoyed an excellent roast beef dinner and heard Prof. James M. Whitley give a lively account of student activities at Queen's. He is executive assistant to the Principal and Director of Student Affairs and Services.

'Good Luck' Dinner for Brockville Branch

The Brockville Branch, after a hibernation period of four years, has blossomed forth again and celebrated its emergence with a 'Good Luck' Dinner held at the Grenville Lodge near Prescott on Friday, April 13 (of all things).

A turnout of close to 60 people from Brockville, Prescott and Kemptville heard James Courtright, Sc. '41, Vice-Principal (Development and Information) speak on the changing face of Queen's and enjoyed a slide presentation by way of illustration.

The evening concluded with the introduction of a slate of officers for the coming year: Mrs. Watson Stevenson (Rae Gilbert), Arts '55, Dick Acton, Sc. '58, Arnold Burwell, Sc. '56 (Fall), Douglas Campbell, Arts '68, Ed. '69, Dr. Joe Cooke, Med. '55, John Downs, Sc. '67, Barry Le Gresley, Sc. '72, Clarence Marshall, Sc. '47 and Grant McKay, Sc. '49.

The Misses we missed: Two ladies who attended the charter dinner of the Newfoundland Branch but who were not in the group photo published in April are Elva Locklin (left) and Desiree Dichmont, both Arts '67, both of Carbonerar.

Play it again, Sam

At Queen's, few things about tennis have remained the same except the name, the rules, and its popularity. Above, ladies in sweeping skirts play on grassy courts behind the new Grant Hall and Arts Building. Right, skirts have been traded for shorts and the courts are behind the Library and Gordon Hall. Below, the men are now in shorts and the courts have moved up to the roof of the Jock Harty Arena, corner of Union, Division and Clergy streets. From left to right on the horizon: Chalmers Church, Dupuis Hall, the Courthouse, three storeys of Goodwin Hall, Miller Hall with its new extension and Nicol Hall.

“Heritage Kingston” is the name of what’s happening this season in and around the Agnes Etherington Art Centre. In attempting to describe this living look at the city’s 300-year history, art critics are thumbing through the thesaurus to avoid words like “exhibition,” “display,” “presentation” or “collection.” “Heritage Kingston” is all of these, and something more. It was opened with a mixture of pomp, ceremony and fun on June 3 by Canada’s Secretary of State, Hugh Faulkner.

Physically, “Heritage Kingston” is made up of paintings, early maps, manuscripts, charters, posters and political cartoons, aboriginal artifacts, scale model boats and locomotives, period room reconstructions, dioramas, an outdoor gazebo and an audio-visual slide program to wrap it all up.

Thematically, “Heritage Kingston” (both the exhibition and the catalogue) is divided into 11 areas: Archeological evidence; the Indian and French period; the Loyalists and the War of 1812; the aftermath; artists’ Kingston; churches and churchmen and the birth of a University; Kingston triumphant; Kingston elegance; transportation; natives and visitors (a portrait gallery); progress/stabilitas: a long Victorian afternoon; and a Kingston photographic album.

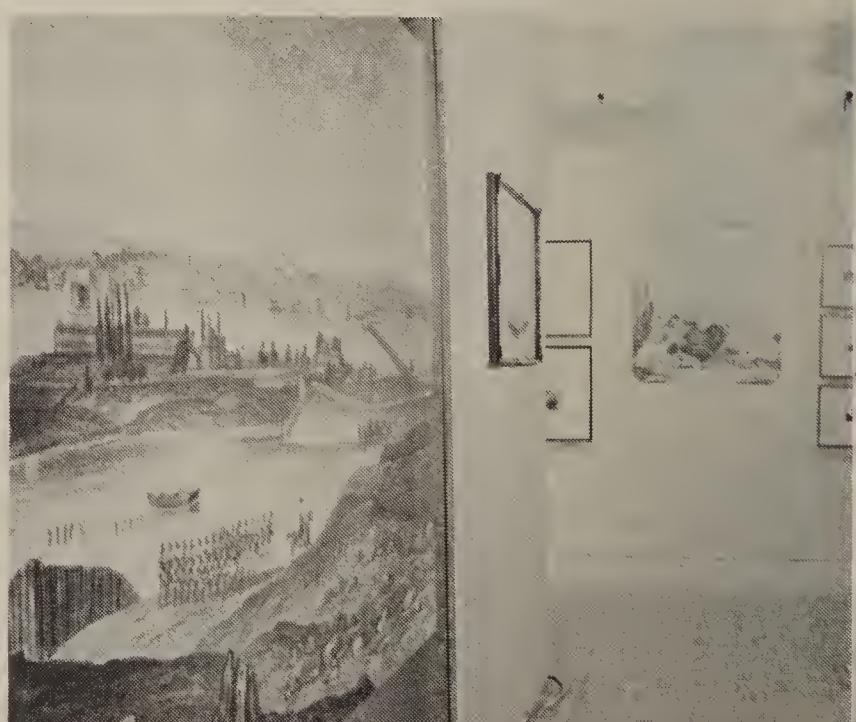

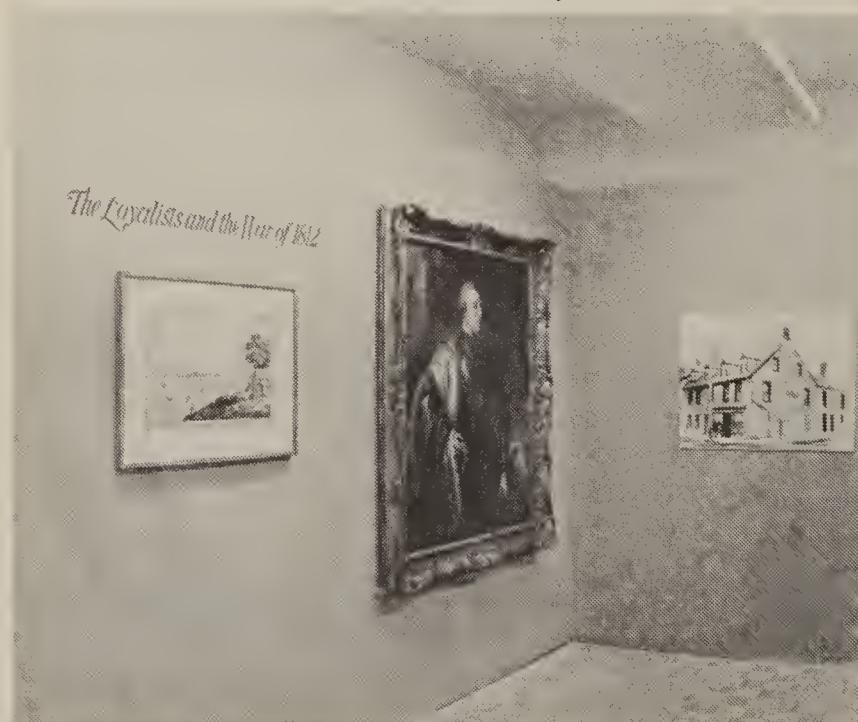

Heritage

A young lady takes a long look at old Kingston as seen through the eyes of artists over the centuries.

‘The Loyalists and the War of 1812’ is one of the exhibition’s 11 themes. Several items were loaned by the U.S.

To collect all the materials to bring these themes to life required three years of research and co-ordination, piles of correspondence with New York, Chicago, Paris and London, and expeditions from coast to coast in Canada.

"Heritage Kingston" was conceived, visually designed and installed by artist-in-residence Ralph Allen, with the help of assistant curator Bill Muysson. Mrs. Frances K. Smith, acting director of the Art Centre until recently, was exhibition co-ordinator. Research and planning were handled chiefly by archivist Ian Wilson and art history professor J. Douglas Stewart, who also are largely responsible for writing the catalogue for the exhibition.

The book Heritage Kingston was an immediate success, as was the exhibition itself from the day of its gala opening. Designed by Queen's graphics chief, Peter Dorn, the book is 9 by 12 inches, has 220 pages and 260 illustrations. For anyone who can't visit "Heritage Kingston" before it closes on October 28, the book is an art/history treasure on its own. It is available from the Agnes Etherington Art Centre, Queen's University, for $5.00 per copy, plus 25¢ for mailing. (Make cheques payable to "Queen's University.")

Convocation-in-the-round was the new look in graduations this spring at the Jock Harty Arena. In the photo at left, under the gala banners in Queen's colours, are Chancellor J.B. Stirling, student Rector Garry Gannage, and Principal John J. Deutsch, delivering his address to the graduates seated behind the platform. Honorary degree candidates are on the platform behind the Principal. Faculty are seated on the other three sides, with the students' families and friends behind them.

Because of the City's special Tercentennial celebrations, the Senate selected for honorary degrees 13 persons whose contributions to Canadian life have been made chiefly in the Kingston area. Their citations appear on the following pages.

A most enjoyable reflection of the Tercentenary bonds between the community and the University was the participation of three high school bands.

On May 25, Theology and Education graduates were entertained by the 47-member Frontenac Secondary School Band, directed by Edward Bartlett.

On May 26, graduates in Medicine, Law, Applied Science, Business, Rehabilitation Therapy and Graduate Studies were treated to music by the 51-member Napanee District Secondary School Senior Concert Band, under the direction of Ernest W. Doughty.

On June 2, the Loyalist Collegiate Concert Band, with 70 members under the direction of Robert J. Clark, played for the graduates in Arts and Science and Physical and Health Education.

*Mr. Chancellor,
I have the honour to present to you that they may receive at your hands the degree of Doctor of Laws*, honoris causa, . . .*

MARGARET SHARP ANGUS,
LL.D.

born in Chinook, Montana, graduate of the University of Montana, Canadian by choice and adoption, Kingstonian by dedication; President of the Kingston Historical Society, whose purposeful activities on behalf of Kingston's Tercentenary suggest the invigorating north wind rather than the mild Chinook; whose long service to Queen's is counted in the happy memories of numberless students who received, at her hands, unstinting hospitality and friendship as well as sound professional advice on everything from costume design for Drama Guild productions to the principles of responsible broadcasting; social historian and author, who, through unremitting research and skilful writing, has diligently quarried the historical lode of Kingston for those treasures of stone and memory that enrich our understanding of who we are and whence we came.

EDMUND HARRY BOTTERELL,

graduate of the University of Manitoba, whose distinguished career as neurosurgeon, scientist, teacher and Dean has taken him from his birthplace in Vancouver to Winnipeg, to outstanding wartime service in Britain, to Toronto and then to Kingston where, as Dean of Medicine and Vice-Principal (Health Sciences), he guided medical education and the organization of patient care during a decade of unprecedented change and fruitful development. Strong in mind, astute in realism, persuasive in personality, relentless in purpose, but gentle in heart, who in his own dedication to the treatment and care of paraplegics and in pioneering the forbidding territory of cerebrovascular surgery, has exemplified the principle that the patient's interest is primary; and in his imaginative guidance of medical teaching has single-mindedly pursued the path of excellence which can alone assure the welfare of patients both today and tomorrow.

THELMA BOGART BOUCHER,

graduate of Queen's and the University of Chicago; scholarly authority on the flora and fauna of the Canadian woods, whose understanding of nature, including the human variety, has made her a creative as well as active participant in the affairs of the Kingston community through service on the Board of Education, the Board of Health and the Library Board. She has served this University with distinction and devotion as member of the Board of Trustees and of the Board of Ban Righ for 24 years. The possessor of the greenest of green thumbs, as writer and broadcaster she has generously shared her horticultural wizardry with thousands of grateful readers and listeners in all parts of Canada.

ALEXANDER BROTT, LL.D.
composer, conductor, violinist, teacher of music at a sister university; musician extraordinary, whose music-making activities have been familiar to enthusiastic audiences on both sides of the Atlantic for a quarter century and more; whose appointment as conductor of the Kingston Symphony eight years ago presented a stimulating challenge to Kingston instrumentalists and audiences alike; and whose charming cajolery and subtle pedagogy have lifted the capacities and ambitions of both to heights they hardly suspected possible, thus earning for Kingston a proud and permanent place in the annals of orchestral development in Ontario; an impresario, as well as conductor, who has brought to us as soloists some of the great musicians of our time; a versatile virtuoso who imparts style and grace to all he does and who can reveal through musical imagination the fun and fancy to be discovered in a circle, a triangle, and four squares, or in The Emperor's New Clothes.

JAMES CARRUTHERS CAMERON, LL.D.

Scottish by birth, Canadian, Kingstonian and Queen'sman by adoption; pioneer practitioner and teacher in Canadian industrial relations; founder and head of the first university Industrial Relations Department in Canada at Queen's; as much at home in the world of affairs as in the classroom, his perseverance over 23 years as stimulating teacher, productive researcher and writer, wise counsellor of governments, effective arbitrator and conciliator, left an indelible imprint on the field of industrial relations throughout this country. His genuine idealism and concern for the dignity of man, coupled with a tough practicality, persuasive gentleness and a pawky humor, have won him the lasting respect and friendship of over 300 graduates of the Industrial Relations Professional Diploma Course and of his other undergraduate and graduate students, many now holding senior positions in Canada and abroad. For those who have studied or worked with him—and remember his insistence on labour being spelled with an "o-u-r"—he remains Canada's "Mr. Industrial Relations."

distinguished son of Queen's, who returned to this University to develop the specialty of cardiology and then, for a quarter of a century, to lead the Department of Medicine. A member of the devoted band of teachers who carried the Queen's Medical School through the pressures of World War II and who became a Canadian pioneer in the development of geographic full-time clinical teachers in the Faculty of Medicine. Warm and skilful physician, consultant of consultants, teacher of teachers, he has allowed only the needs of his patients to compete with the welfare of his students and of the University. For nearly 40 years, from dawn—literally—to dusk, his awesome enthusiasm and fiery devotion to teaching have kindled the affection and industry of many generations of Queen's students.

graduate of the universities of Toronto and Chicago, Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada, seasoned political economist, equally in command of the science of economics and the art of politics. A consummate practitioner of these great skills, active at crucial moments in reviving the Canadian Political Science Association, in buttressing the case for a central Bank in Canada, in refining legislation about combines and monopolies, in directing the Canadian National Railways, in extending the boundaries of the City of Kingston and cleansing its adjacent waters. Long-time teacher and one-time Dean of Graduate Studies at this University which he has served with great devotion, many times alderman and three times Mayor of Kingston, no ordinary city. He has been a sagacious adviser of authorities, even as far away as Pakistan, and a trusted consultant to those who make and unmake governments. He continues to attract our admiration as one whose measuring eye scans every proposition within reach and finds many of them wanting in important and precise particulars.

JOHN GERALD HANLEY, D.D. son of rural Ontario, graduate of the University of Toronto and St. Augustine's Seminary, ardent and tireless teacher, editor, Newman Chaplain and Vicar General, a priest of the Archdiocese of Kingston for 42 years. Resolute proponent of a university liberal education, he has steadily persuaded all within the considerable ambit of his pen or call to that "habit of mind which lasts through life of which the attributes are freedom. . . calmness, moderation and wisdom." An ecumenist before the term came into favour, he has perceived with lively appreciation and grave esteem those whose authentic values have been of other traditions. To all who needed him, in happiness or hurt, he has been a trusted confidant, a quiet advocate, a humble adviser, a loyal friend. Throughout his calling, he has given witness by an abiding generous faith which deftly blends acceptance of change with the simplicity of "one step enough for me." Though "not a Queen'sman born," his adoption of this University has been pledged in service and affection.

ROBERT HENDERSON HAY, LL.D.

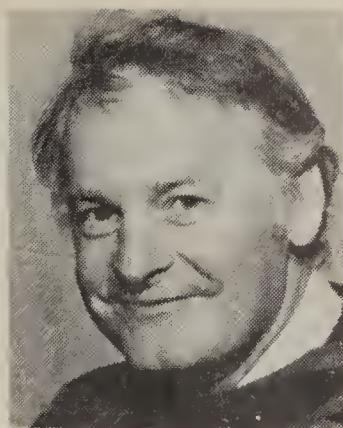

graduate of Queen's and Columbia universities, past President of the Canadian Association of Physicists, skilled practitioner in the science and technology of metals; who, for more than a quarter century, gave distinguished leadership to the Physics Division of Aluminium Laboratories; loyal alumnus of Queen's and nurtured by Victoria University, laureated by the University of Toronto and the University of Chicago. Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada; accomplished political scientist who is the undisputed master of learning about the Public Service of Canada; watchful critic of quality in Canadian public administration, whose service as Editorial Director to the Royal Commission on Government Organization was central to the success of that body; penetrating thinker, lively and graceful writer, for nearly 20 years he added lustre to Queen's University as scholar, teacher and editor, and his departure thence has been regretted as deeply as his later successes have been admired, first as Principal of Victoria College, and then as President of Victoria University.

ARCHIBALD CARL EIX RITTER, LL.D.

graduate of this University, experienced teacher, principal and inspector of schools who, as first Director of Education, led and guided the Kingston Public School System through a difficult decade of change and unprecedented growth. Sustained by an abiding faith in the capacity of young people to benefit from enlarged opportunities for choice and enrichment, he persistently and courageously pursued the goals of quality and diversity. He has devoted his vigorous administrative abilities to the direction of the Canadian National Defence Schools in Europe and, more lately, to the training of teachers in the developing country of Kenya. He is remembered gratefully in Kingston by all those parents and teachers and pupils who have reason to know at first hand what was accomplished under his able direction.

The members elected will serve until March 31, 1980.

YOU and QUEEN'S

Judging by the questions they ask, many graduates still find the internal workings of their Alma Mater rather like that "mystery wrapped inside an enigma." Now the University has published a booklet entitled You and Queen's: How to Participate in the Work and Government of the University. It analyzes the Senate, the Board of Trustees, the University Council and the Alma Mater Society under three headings each: Function, Membership, and Procedures for Election and/or Appointment.

The 20-page booklet is not a collection or synopsis of constitutions, statutes and bylaws. It was written to present, as simply as possible, the nature and roles of the various organs of Queen's government. Copies are available from the Alumni Office.

Years of uncertainty end for Theological College

After five years of uncertainty, it's definite: Queen's Theological College will be continued as a degree-granting institution of the United Church of Canada.

Since 1968 the United Church had been considering closing three of its eight colleges, including the one at Queen's, in an attempt to make the most economical use of all the Church's educational facilities. In 1971, Queen's Theological College undertook a study about its future, under the direction of Rev. Edmund J. Roche. After nine months of investigation, Rev. Roche offered a list of conclusions, the first of which was "that Queen's Theological College be continued indefinitely as an institution for training personnel for the ordained ministry."

The United Church agreed, and made its decision known officially when the College's Board of Management met on May 12.

The early years of indecision had some effect on enrolment, but now it has steadied at 37 full-time students, six part-time students and 10 in the relatively new Institute of Pastoral Care. The College staff also serves as the Department of Religion for the Faculty of Arts and Science, and faculty members have been kept so busy that in some courses enrolment has had to be limited in recent years. About 1,300 students—most of them from Arts and Science but a healthy number from Engineering and Medicine—were taking courses in Religion in 1972-73.

At the Theological College's Convocation in St. Margaret's Church

this spring, 17 men and women were awarded their testamurs. Of these, 14 have been or will be ordained into the ministry of the United Church and the others have gone to work within the Anglican and Moravian Communions.

Students enrolled in the Bachelor of Divinity program for next fall come from the United, Lutheran, Roman Catholic, Anglican, Disciples of Christ, Brazilian Methodist, and Presbyterian churches.

Dr. C. Haldor Parker, a member of faculty for 12 years, has been Acting Principal of the College since the death of the Rev. Dr. Donald M. Mathers last September. Dr. Parker announced to the College Convocation that the goal of $10,000 for a memorial lectureship in honour of the late Principal was "almost subscribed" and that the first Mathers Memorial Lecture is scheduled for February 1974.

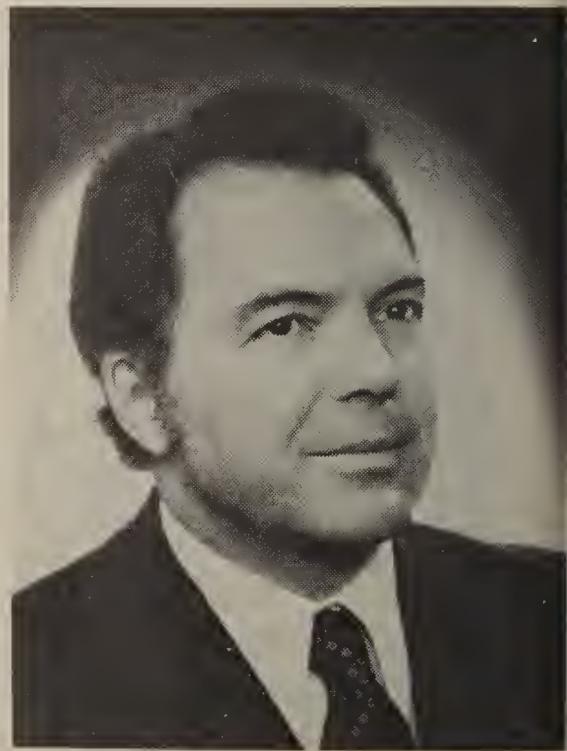

Dr. Robert Bater, minister and author, to be College's Principal next spring

The College's Board of Management has announced that Dr. B. Robert Bater will assume the Principalship of Queen's Theological College next spring. Dr. Bater, 45, is now the senior minister of Eglinton United Church in Toronto. For the 13 years prior to his appointment there, Dr. Bater was Professor of New Testament at St. Andrew's College and lecturer in Biblical Literature at the University of Saskatchewan.

He is a native of Saskatchewan, a former Rhodes scholar, and a graduate of the University of Saskatchewan; Worcester College, Oxford; Union Theological Seminary, New York; and the University of Tübingen, Germany. His major academic interest has been the New Testament's relevance to contemporary social problems.

Dr. Bater is author of the United Church's adult study book All This and Christian, Too (1970-71) and has contributed to such publications as the Canadian Journal of Theology, Interpretation, Religion and Life, Journal of Biblical Literature and The United Church Observer.

The Rt. Hon.
ROLAND
MICHENER named ninth CHANCELLOR of Queen's

The Right Honourable Roland Michener, C.C., C.M.M., C.D., LL.D., is the unanimous choice of the University Council to succeed Dr. J.B. Stirling as Chancellor of Queen's. Dr. Michener has accepted the nomination on the understanding that he is not free to take up the appointment until completion of his duties as Governor General of Canada. Dr. Stirling, who has been Chancellor for 13 years, will continue in the post until Dr. Michener is free to take office.

The Chancellor-elect is no stranger to either public ceremonial life or Queen's. One of the 13 honorary degrees he holds from Canadian universities is an LL.D. from Queen's, awarded in 1958 when he was Speaker of the House of Commons. Dr. Michener has served in both the provincial and federal legislatures. From 1964 to 1967 he was Canada's High Commissioner to India. He chaired Manitoba's Royal Commission on Local Government and Finance and has held directorships in several mining and financial corporations.

He is a graduate of the University of Alberta and Oxford University, England, and is a former Governor of the University of Toronto. He has been honoured by such institutions as the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons, Trinity College, Oxford University, and the Toronto Academy of Medicine. He also holds the Order of Canada. Among other careers, Dr. Michener was a lawyer with the Toronto firm of Lang and Michener.

As ninth holder of this largely ceremonial office which dates back to 1877, the Chancellor will attend all formal University events, will be the key figure in the conferring of degrees, and will serve on both the Board of Trustees and the University Council.

Another milestone for Mining and Geology

A double-barrelled highlight of Reunion Weekend will be the official openings of two buildings and a related symposium of national significance—"Trends in the Mineral Industry in the Next Decade"—on Friday, October 26.

The buildings are Goodwin Hall, home of Mining Engineering, and the addition to Miller Hall (Geological Science), which is to be called the Bruce Wing and will include the Hawley Laboratories. The names commemorate Professors E.L. (Louie) Bruce and James Edwin (Ed) Hawley, both of them long and fruitfully associated with geology teaching and research at Queen's.

Professor Bruce, who graduated in 1911 and returned as Professor of Mineralogy in 1919, was Canada's first specialist in Precambrian geology. He died in 1949. Dr. Hawley, one of Professor Bruce's students, spent most of his life studying ore deposits and their mineralogy. He succeeded Bruce as head of the Department of Mineralogy in 1930 and as Miller Research Professor in 1949. A mineral discovered in the 1960's was named 'hawleyite' in his honour. He died in 1965.

The name of the Mining Engineering Building honours Dr. W.L. Goodwin, first Dean of the Faculty of Applied Science (1916). He came to Queen's as a chemistry teacher and became the first director of the School of Mining when it was established in 1893. Even after his retirement in 1920 he taught prospectors for eight years and wrote The Prospector's Handbook. He is also credited with the design of Gordon Hall, the first building in Canada specially designed for teaching chemistry. His name was formerly attached to Goodwin House, his long-time home which became a women's residence in 1925. When Victoria Hall opened in 1969 and made the annexes unnecessary, one of Victoria's wings was named Goodwin House.

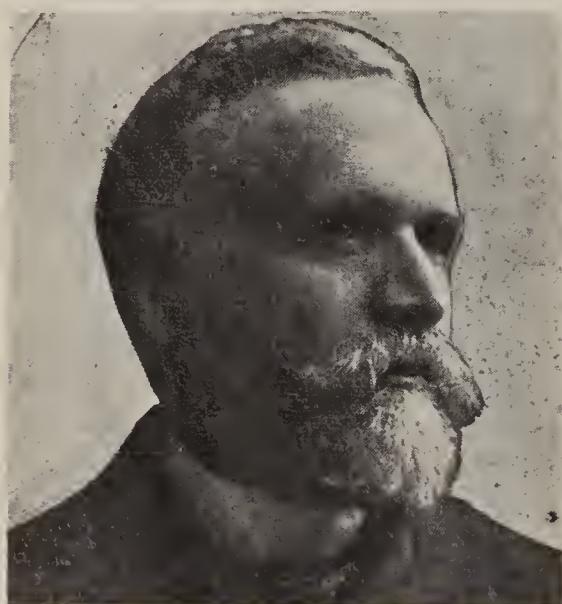

When Goodwin Hall is officially opened on October 26, the ribbon will be cut by Mrs. A.A. de Gast, widow of a Mining Engineering professor who died recently. The Hon. Jack McNie, Ontario Minister of Colleges and Universities, will officiate at the Bruce Wing ceremony.

All mining and geology graduates are being invited to share in the opening ceremonies and the symposium which precedes them on Friday morning.

Keynote speaker on "Trends in the Mineral Industry in the Next Decade" will be Dr. Robert F. Legget, a former Queen's professor and now retired as director of N.R.C.'s Division of Building Research. M. King Hubbert of the U.S. Geological Survey will speak on exploration; John Kostuik, Sc. '34, president of Denison Mines Ltd., will speak on mining; and Louis Renzoni, vice-president of INCO and director of Special Technical Projects, will speak on mineral processing. Luncheon speaker will be the Hon. Donald S. Macdonald, Canada's Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Around the Campus

STIRLING HONOURED. At the end of its day-long session on June 1, the University Council paid tribute to the retiring Chancellor at a dinner in Wallace Hall. Mrs. Stirling received a silver pendant. Dr. Stirling holds one of two woodcuts by Gwenyth Travers (Grant Hall and Theological Hall towers) presented by the Principal.

High-rise student apartment tower renting

Queen's IV, the high-rise apartment tower on the West Campus, is nearing completion and accepting applications for August-September occupancy.

The 16-storey tower contains 123 one-bedroom apartments, each one with a balcony, fridge, stove and drapery. Rents start at $141 per month and rise slightly at the sixth and again at the tenth floors.

Priority is being given to married students without children and other full-time students, with only two persons per unit allowed.

Queen's IV is located north of McArthur Hall, near the old limestone "Hanging Tower."

Approve French course to train translators

Beginning with the 1974-75 session, Queen's Department of French will offer what is called a "Special Field" degree program—an Honours B.A. in French Language, Translation and French Canadian Studies. The program's intent is both academic and practical. After two years in the regular Honours French program, the Special Field students may take their third year in a French-speaking institution. Their final year involves courses in simultaneous and specialized translation, Canadianisms and Anglicisms.

In confirming its approval for funding, the Ontario Ministry of Colleges and Universities commended Queen's "on providing a course which is timely and will undoubtedly prove of great value in training French translators in Canada."

New Ophthalmology head

Dr. R.M.H. Pinkerton, M.B., B.Ch., FRCS (Eng.) FRCS (C), has been appointed Professor and Head of the Department of Ophthalmology at Queen's and Kingston General Hospital. He succeeds Dr. D.A. Rosen, who asked to be relieved of his administrative duties after 19 years, in order to spend more time on academic and professional activities.

Dr. Pinkerton, a graduate of Queen's University, Belfast, has been with the Faculty of Medicine since 1964.

Peterborough Teachers College moving to join Queen's Faculty of Education

As part of a major revamping of teacher training in Ontario, the 17-member staff of Peterborough Teachers College will transfer as a unit to Queen's Faculty of Education in September. The closing of teachers colleges in both Peterborough and Stratford follows a decline in the number of teacher-graduates required in the province. At the elementary level, numbers needed fell from 7,000 in 1969 to 3,600 in 1971; for secondary school teachers, the decline was from 3,400 to 2,500 in the same period.

Queen's Principal and the Principal of Trent University in Peterborough have worked out an arrangement under which Trent graduates entering the one-year teachers' course at Queen's will remain "essentially Trent students." They will divide their time between Trent and

Joins News Department

H. Craig Campbell, son of Dr. Hudson Campbell, Med. '42, has joined Queen's News Department as Information Officer. He is a native of Kingston and a graduate in Journalism from Carleton University. Since graduation in 1969, he has travelled widely in Europe and the Middle East, making notes for a novel that's in progress. Mr. Campbell is also co-editor of a Canadian literary magazine called Northern Journey.

He replaces Brian Flynn, who resigned due to ill health.

Many summer projects earned OFY approval

Kingston and Queen's projects netted $135,400 of the federal government's Opportunities for Youth funds this summer. The grants provided jobs for 117 people, with a maximum of $90 per week for the University students.

Largest grant in the area ($17,200) went to Camp Outlook, a Queen's-based program now in its fourth year, and one which has enjoyed alumni support through the Padre's office. Sixteen students are providing canoe trips in Algonquin Park for disadvantaged teenagers.

Eight other projects involving 57 Queen's students were awarded a total of $68,000. The students will guide walking tours in connection with the Art Centre's Heritage Kingston exhibition, will provide legal services, teach and entertain the retarded and the handicapped, operate a hostel and run day camps in low-income areas.

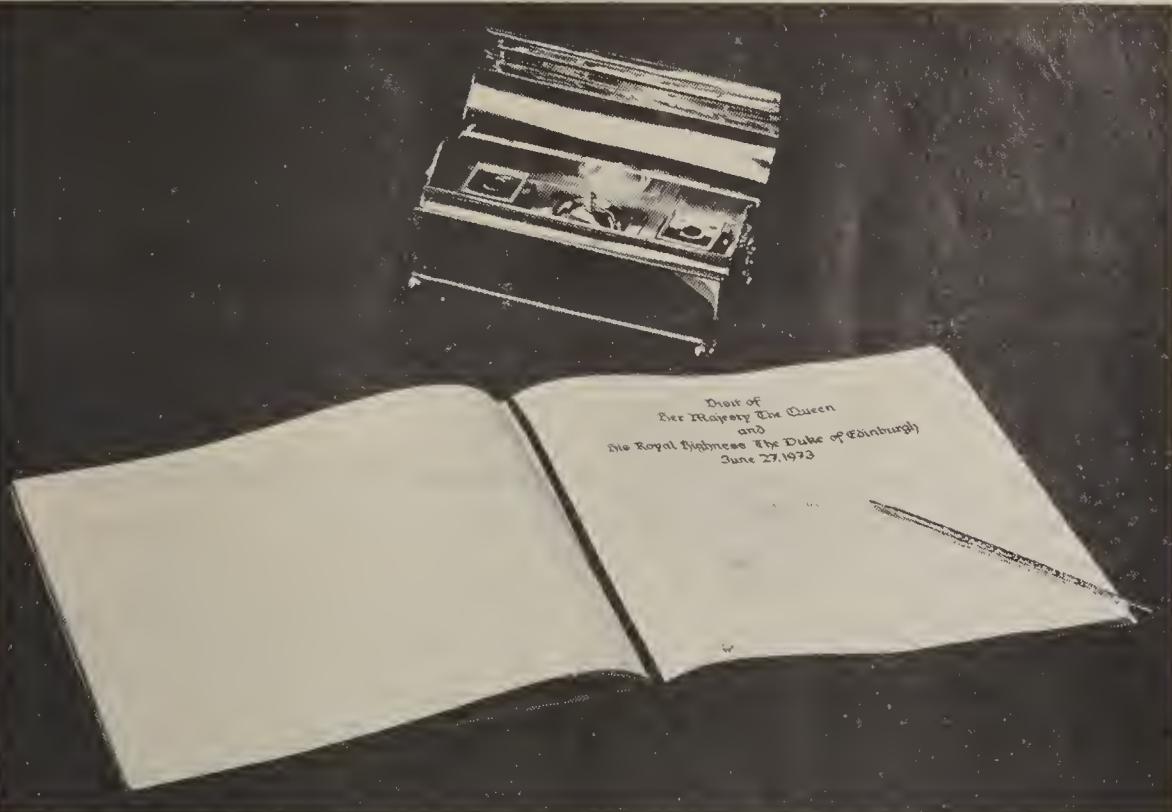

More honour, more work for Queen's Principal

Queen's Principal, Dr. John J. Deutsch, has earned himself more honours—and inherited even more work. He is one of this year's winners of the prestigious Molson Prize awarded by the Canada Council and valued at $15,000. Dr. Deutsch was cited for his outstanding contribution to national unity in the area of economics, education and public administration.

Dr. Deutsch has also been named by United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim to a U.N. group which will study the effects and accountability of multinational corporations. The Principal is the only Canadian on the 18-member team.

Prime Minister Trudeau announced this spring that Dr. Deutsch has been re-appointed to the Advisory Group on Executive Compensation in the Public Service. He has also been named a Director of the Bell Foundation. He is one of five Canadians requested to serve in this capacity according to the will of the late publisher Maxwell Bell of Calgary, who established the Foundation for the support of education and charities.

Dr. Deutsch was also named to a 15-member Federal Government committee formed to study the financial impact of Canadian Northern pipeline development. He chaired the Province of Ontario's Advisory Committee on Energy, which recently published its report in two volumes.

THE FIRST SIGNATURES in the University's new guest book are those of 'Elizabeth R' and 'Philip', made during the royal couple's visit to the campus on June 27. The Queen also unveiled a plaque to "commemorate the granting of Queen's University's Royal Charter by Queen Victoria on 16 October 1841."

Buck Fuller to visit

R. Buckminster Fuller, inventor, engineer, scientist, mathematician, poet, philosopher and North America's most famous "futurist," has accepted an invitation to be Queen's fourth Brockington Visitor.

The visitorship was founded in 1968 by the late Col. R.S. McLaughlin in memory of his long-time friend and Queen's long-time Rector, Leonard W. Brockington.

Dr. Fuller, now 77, lectures at Southern Illinois University. He is best known for his design of the geodesic dome (called the first major basic improvement in mobile structure in the past 2600 years), and the dymaxion house and car. He will visit Queen's October 14 through 20.

Rabbi Mintz leaving Queen's for the U.S.

Rabbi Juda H. Mintz, director of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at Queen's for the past five-and-a-half years, is leaving to take up the position of director of the Hillel Foundation in Atlanta, Georgia. His responsibilities will include the initiation and implementation of Hillel programming at Emory

Grant links Art Centre to national treasures

The Agnes Etherington Art Centre has received an initial grant of $223,000 from the Department of the Secretary of State. The award, made under the special grants sector of the National Museums of Canada program, will go towards expanding the Centre to almost double its present size. Then Queen's will be able to serve the Eastern Ontario community better by displaying long-term loans of specially selected works from the collections of National Museums.

Having more space at the Centre will also allow Queen's to implement a proposed graduate program in Art Conservation.

University, Georgia Tech, Georgia State and Oglethorpe University. He will also teach a course in Judaic studies at Emory.

During his time in Kingston, he was the spiritual leader of the city's Jewish Community (Beth Israel Congregation), as well as chaplain to Jewish faculty and students.

Letters

Dear Sir:

Re your issue for March-April, page 39, "Fraternities," your information is wrong. A chapter of Phi Sigma Kappa was quite active in the late 1890's and the early 1900's. A few of the distinguished graduates who were members, as well as Prof. P.G.C. Campbell and one other Arts professor, were F. Stuart Lrazier, chief engineer, Welland Canal; James F. Pringle, vice-president, C.N.R.; Herbert S. Wood, Judge of the Supreme Court of B.C.; Col. G. G. Grier, R.C.A.M.C., D.M.O., M.D.3, and D.M.O., M.D.2, Toronto; R.H. Cooper, civil engineer; Jack Kilburn, chief engineer, Canadian Railway Commission.

Others included Arthur V. Wood, M.C., Major, 72nd Highlanders, killed in action in France in 1918; Jack Marshall, Ottawa, who was manager of our hockey team in the days of Howard Box, Ken McKinnon, and Mike Rodden; and George Kilburn, Dr. Archie McGlenon, P.E. Doncaster, and R. Wigle.

I would like to hear from any of my fraternal brothers who may be extant.

Dear Sir:

I learned today, a quarter of a year after the event, of the death of Dr. D.C. Matheson, "Mattie" to many and "Maddie" to me.

To us, their students, men like Maddie circled in elevated and remote orbits, for his capacity for knowledge in his field was immense and his storehouse of facts on anatomy could only be compared with the computer, the birth of which he so closely antedated.

A major anatomical textbook must be without equal for endless descriptions of weighty and dry data, yet Maddie, lecturing without notes, would state that the illustration of a certain point could be found on page 1271 of Gray's eleventh edition or page 938 of Cunningham's seventh edition or page 1175 of Grant's atlas, but he might add that the illustration in one of these was incorrect because a certain nerve passed over a certain muscle and not under it, as depicted.

With this background of irrefutable authority, it was unnerving to discover, in the course of time, that Maddie could err.

On one occasion, one of my overly ardent classmates who had recently memorized a completely impractical and absolutely useless list of the ossification centres of the sacrum came to Maddie and in all sincerity stated that he had been rehearsing the 23 centres of ossification and could only recall 22 and would Dr. Matheson please identify the missing one. "Good grief, boy, I don't know," said the esteemed one shortly, implying that even genius knows its limits.

On a second occasion, Maddie had been lecturing on the testicle and its environs and on a projected image on the screen had pointed out the sulcus epididymidis. He had made a particular point about the spelling, indicating that it was not the noun "epididymis" but that it was the Latin form meaning "of the epididymis."

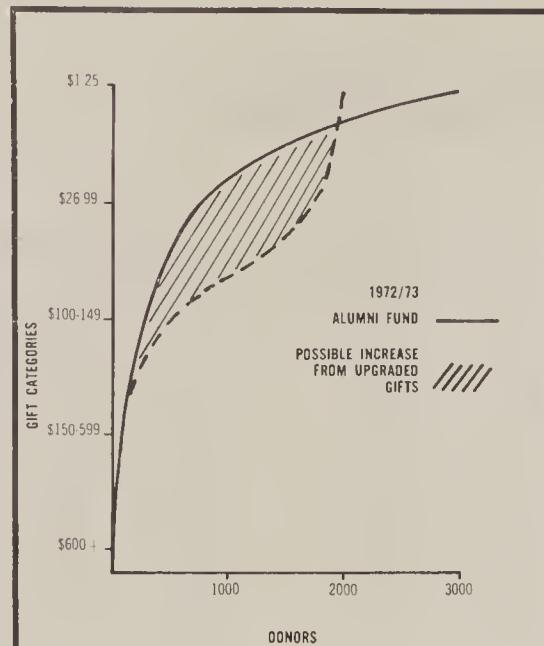

After the lecture, Dr. Joseph Tomasch, lecturer in anatomy, was instructing our group at the dissecting table and he pointed out the aforementioned sulcus. Joe had recently immigrated from Vienna and all his V's were soft, which was a minor catastrophe in a subject filled with veins and vessels. (I recount this without a trace of depreciation. We were fond of Joe. Anyone who spent three years counting the number of nerve fibres in a cross-section of the corpus callosum could not be all bad.) Joe's tongue became twisted on the epididymidis. He tried again and still could not persuade it to come out in the proper order so he gave up with the observation that "Anyway, it isn't Latin, it's Greek."

Maddie's lectures occurred after lunch and the 65 of us in a post-prandial state were enclosed in an unventilated room while the professor spoke for an hour or so in the dark, pointing out anatomical features on a large screen of illustrations projected from the rear of the room.

One of my classmates, who had exasperated himself by continually falling asleep, had determined to solve the problem. He moved a high stool out into the aisle between the rows of ordinary amphitheatre chairs and informed us that he could not now possibly go to sleep or he would fall off the stool. The lights went out and hardly ten minutes later there was a crash from the aisle.

The instructors in anatomy sat down near the front, and after one lengthy session in the dark, Maddie, after making a point, looked over in

FUND COMMITTEE ANALYZES 1972/73 ALUMNI FUND GIFT CATEGORIES

Joe's direction and enquired, "Is that not correct, Dr. Tomasch?" but answer there was none because Joe was at one with his students in the arms of Morpheus.

Maddie was indefatigable in his devotion to teaching. One of his students, whose prime interest was in playing football for the University and whose record in anatomy was considerably less than spectacular, having missed many of the dissection periods during the term, decided to catch up on his work. Maddie had been working with some of us who had also been putting in overtime (it must have been just before the examination) and we were leaving the building at 10:30 in the evening. As we descended the stairs, about to close the building for the night, with Maddie half way down the stairs and half way into his raincoat, we encountered our errant classmate ascending. Maddie turned in his tracks and without a word accompanied the student back up to the dissecting room to begin again.

It seems a great pity that intellects such as Maddie's must be lost to humanity. An enormous amount of knowledge resided in his brain, built up through many years of accumulating, screening and reinforcing. Here was an expert in his field, a man who could point out two or three dozen differences between a male and female pelvis and who, on a single unearthed bone, could give the police a history.

He was a gracious man, a gold medallist as a student, and to know him was an enriching experience.

A study of the 1972/73 Alumni Fund reveals that one of the major reasons for its success in reaching $200,000 for the first time was the higher level of giving on the part of more than 900 graduates.

Ray Bassett, B.A. '49, LL.B., Chairman of the Alumni Fund Committee, said when announcing the 1973/74 goal of $220,000: "Many graduates may hold the view that support provided to universities by governments fully satisfies university needs and that the help given by alumni, corporations and friends is becoming less significant. In fact the reverse is closer to the truth. The recent announcement of a freeze on capital funding of universities and a limit on operating grants has made private support more important than ever before. There is now a greater opportunity and need for our alumni to participate in projects designed to help preserve the traditions, the excellence of the educational program and the unique spirit that is Queen's."

"All gifts are needed. I hope our graduates do not feel that an annual contribution of $5 or $10 is not worth making. Regular annual participation by as many alumni as possible is essential to the success of future Annual Funds. Proportionate giving is the key."

With these words in mind, a calculation has been made of the effect there would be on the Fund if one-third of the graduates now contributing in the categories $1-$25 and $26-$99 moved in 1973/74 to the next category and gave the average gift. The result is shown by the shaded area on the graph: at least an additional $40,000 for Queen's.

Gordon Eligh, B.Com. '39, Vice-Chairman of the Fund Committee, has observed: "Not all graduates are financially able to give more than they now do, and we are deeply grateful to those in this category for the loyal support they provide regularly each year. Similarly, many of our younger graduates may not be able to help for a few years after leaving Queen's. But many of us can raise our sights, and I urge all who can to give this leadership and join us in our efforts to do more for Queen's through annual giving."

Planner Guest at Belleville

The Belleville Branch held its Spring Dinner meeting at the Sun Valley Motor Inn on May 23. The University Campus Planner, Eric W. Thrift, gave an illustrated talk on plans for development and landscaping of both the main and west campuses for the next few years.

Whiplash at Toronto Bash

The Toronto Branch held its traditional Spring Dance at the Royal Canadian Yacht Club on the evening of June 15. Music was provided by Whiplash, a rock group from the U.S. nightclub circuit. The dancers were able to cool off at midnight when a tasty luncheon was served.

Elections in London

The Spring Dinner of the London Branch was held May 17 at the Highland Country Club. Following a reception and dinner, the guests heard Queen's Professor Cecil Law, Director of the Canadian Institute for Guided Ground Transport, present an interesting talk on a proposed (and controversial) railway-pipeline combination to bring oil south from the Arctic.

Officers for the coming year in London, headed by President R.W. (Bob) Pollock, Sc. '37, are: Dr. Andy Kertesz, Med. '60, and Bill Rowley, Sc. '56, Vice-Presidents; J.C. (Chuck) Lemmon, Com. '50, Secretary-Treasurer; and Ron Martindale, Arts '65, Dr. Robin Bolton, Med. '61, and Dr. Brian Hennen, Med. '62, Directors.

New Peterborough Executive

On May 31 the Annual Dinner meeting of the Peterborough Branch was held at the Kawartha Golf and Country Club. Guests heard James Hooper, Sc. '50, Peterborough City Engineer, describe "Peterborough Square," a redevelopment project that has sparked considerable speculation, controversy and interest over a period of several years. A scale model of the project was on display.

A new executive, headed by Dr. Jack Sniderman, Med. '64, was elected. Other officers are Mrs. Joan Wilton, Arts '63, and Bob Martilla, Sc. '60, Vice-Presidents; Mrs. Ruth Towns, Arts '67, Secretary; Mrs. Barbara Stevenson, Arts '63, Treasurer; and Dr. Jack Hayes, Sc. '60, Dr. Bruce Wilton, Med. '65, Bill Carruthers, Law '64, Miss Marilyn Johnstone, Arts '72, and Rev. Thomas Rex Norman, Theol. '61, as directors.

The Gang Gets Together

Another mini-reunion of the "Queen's Gang" was held on campus the weekend of June 8-10, with 18 of the Gang headquartered in Victoria Hall. The Gang is a group of graduates of the Peterborough "Normal School" who attended Queen's Summer School in the late 1930's and early '40's. They've kept in touch with one another and managed to hold a reunion at least once every 10 years. The June reunion was the third annual get-together since 1970.

The Gang toured the changing campus, took in the Heritage Kingston exhibit at the Art Centre, and capped their weekend with a dinner at the 401 Inn. Dinner guests were Alumni Field Secretary Murray Gill, who gave a capsule history of Queen's growth over 130 years, and Mrs. Gill.

Working on ways to involve more grads

Ways and means by which alumni and alumni branches could assist the University were discussed at the semi-annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association on May 25.

Vice-Principal (Administration) R.J. Kennedy, who is First Vice-President of the Association, suggested as possibilities the screening of applicants for admission, assistance in directing students from outside Ontario and Quebec, and help in finding summer employment for students. It was agreed that these and other recommendations be incorporated into a program for the consideration of the Directors at the fall meeting.

The Directors:

- heard President George E. Perrin's account of his visit with Mrs. Perrin to the branches in Western Canada.
- learned that the Marty Memorial Scholarship of the Alumnae Association had been raised to a value of $3,500, and had been awarded this year to Mrs. Patricia Zelonka, completing her Ph.D. degree in Mathematics at Cambridge.
- paid tribute to the late Willis Gordon Cunningham. (See p. 120.)
- heard Steve Brereton, president of the Alma Mater Society, give an account of student activities, including the fee-withholding campaign, free bus service, the co-ed residence, and student services such as Job Bank, Camp Outlook, and a supplementary educational program to be provided outside regular hours. He expressed student confidence in the administration at Queen's, stating that it was considered to be the best in Canada.

- agreed to recommend to the Board of Trustees that $1,000 of the unrestricted portion of the Alumni Fund be allocated to an information library for Career Planning and Placement on a trial basis.
- learned that the official openings of Goodwin Hall (Mining Engineering) and the addition to Miller Hall (Geology)—to be called the Bruce Wing and Hawley Laboratories—were scheduled for Friday afternoon, October 26, and would form part of the Reunion Weekend program. (See separate article.)

Lively annual meeting for Alumnae

The Queen's University Alumnae Association held its Annual Meeting May 4-6 on the Glendon Campus of York University, Toronto. Besides official business, the weekend included the President's sherry party, hosted by Miss Gladys Heinz, followed by a dinner with special guest Dr. Hilda Neatby, and a coffee party highlighted by Miss Kay Elliott's showing of a silent film on Queen's.

The annual meeting on Saturday morning was well attended, and the following reports dominated the agenda:

- A comprehensive report by Miss Diana Blake on the work of the Users' Committee of the University Centre.
- A report from the Dean of Women, Mrs. Evelyn Reid, presented by her assistant, Miss Eleanor Beach. Miss Beach thanked the alumnae for their past and on-going contributions in the form of residence furnishings, bursaries and representation on the Ban Righ Board, and described the use to which the residences are put in the evenings—musical "firesides" at Ban Righ, coffee and movie parties in Chown Hall, and a coffee house in Victoria.

- A progress report from the Principal's Committee on the Status of Women, with illustrations of how women's roles are coming into focus.
- A report by Miss Jane Rounthwaite from the Women's Residence Council, describing the problems and successes of having the residences open 24 hours a day and outlining Council's plans for reviving a residence newspaper and instituting a crafts program.
- Reports from the Branches, with emphasis on the implications of merging alumni and alumnae groups in Kingston and Montreal. Mrs. A.C. Taylor (Nancy Baker), Arts '66, spoke in favour of preserving women's role within the overall Alumni Association, as well as on campus. Following more investigation, some action will be taken at the 1974 meeting.

Members were encouraged to hear the following facts:

- There are now 7,986 women graduates, and 1,125 of them have contributed to University funds.

—Of 16 nominations by graduates to the University Council, eight were women and five were elected.

—Former Dean of Women, Mrs. Beatrice Bryce, was elected to the Board of Trustees by the graduates.

—Mrs. Thelma Boucher, the first person proposed by the Alumnae Association to the Senate for an honorary degree, was laureated (LL.D.) at the June 2 Convocation.

Now that funds are not required for building additional residences, the Ban Righ Board is concerned with administering its funds wisely, and a special committee chaired by Dr. Jean Royce is looking into ways in which facilities might be provided for an increasing number of mature students—talented women whose schooling was interrupted and who would not like to return to the campus to round out their education. The committee will welcome suggestions from interested graduates and former students before its recommendations go to the Board.

The national meeting adjourned to join the Spring Luncheon of the Toronto Branch.

FRIENDS INITIATE A MEMORIAL FUND IN LAW

A memorial fund has been initiated by friends of Willis Cunningham. The fund will be used to assist deserving law students and to bring to Queen's persons with outstanding backgrounds in law—particularly in the medical-legal field. Another goal is to stimulate a dialogue between academic and practising lawyers and doctors, students in the two professions and the general public.

The objective is $20,000, of which $4,000 had been collected within a week of the fund's initiation in June.

Any friends wishing to honour the late lawyer and Queen's man may send donations to The Willis G. Cunningham Memorial Fund, Queen's University, or to any of these committee members: William Bosworth, Eric Brown, Michael Carty, Dr. John Fay, Herb Hamilton, Ernie Hurlbut, Michael Hickey, Prof. W. Lederman, Mary Alice Murray, Peter Swan or Dean Daniel Soberman.

The University will issue receipts for income tax purposes.

Chancellor James Douglas, 1837-1918
Metallurgist, minister, professor, historian, philanthropist

The Rare Book Room (now officially known as the Special Collections Unit) of the Douglas Library is a sanctuary of rare, interesting and more and more heavily used library materials. But not many of the persons passing in and out today are aware that the oil painting on the wall opposite the entrance is one of nine portraits by Sir Wyly Grier in the University's Permanent Collection. (Sir Wyly lived from 1862 to 1957 and was president of the Royal Canadian Academy from 1930 to 1939.) Moreover, they are unaware that this particular likeness is that of a graduate of Queen's who was the University's third Chancellor (succeeding Sir Sandford Fleming, followed by Sir Edward Beatty) and the benefactor for whom the library was named—Dr. James Douglas (1837-1918).

According to the New York Times, James Douglas was rated as “one of the foremost metal and mining authorities in the world,” and the Engineering and Mining Journal called him “the dean of the mining and metallurgical professions.” Yet he had studied theology at Edinburgh, was licensed as a Presbyterian minister, had studied medicine and at one time managed an insane asylum. His father, James Douglas (1800-86), a prominent physician and surgeon, was one of the founders of the Beauport Lunatic Asylum near Quebec City (now the Sanatorium Mastai). In 1910 the son published Journals and Reminiscences of James Douglas, M.D. (available in the Douglas Library) in memory of his father.

The younger James Douglas was born in Quebec City. When he was 18 he went to Edinburgh University and studied theology for two years. In 1858 he received a B.A. from Queen's. He then travelled widely with his father, visiting Europe and Africa. After more study abroad and at home, including some courses in medicine at Laval University, he was licensed in 1861 to preach, but was not ordained, and served briefly as assistant minister at St. Andrew's in Quebec City. He had married Naomi, daughter of Capt. Walter Douglas of Quebec, while he was in Germany in 1860. On the basis of rather slight instruction in chemistry while studying medicine, he served for some years as a professor of chemistry at Quebec's Morrin College, affiliated with McGill University.

The Story of James Douglas

By Rudolph C. Ellsworth

Around this time began the interest in the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec that James Douglas was to show throughout his life. (It is the oldest historical society in Canada, having been founded in 1824. It was given a Royal Charter in 1831 and was active for more than 100 years.) Douglas served on the Society's executive almost continually from 1863, and had been honorary president for 18 years when he died.

The 15 papers he presented to the Society (nine were published in its Transactions) reveal a depth and breadth of interests that began literally with his travels in Egypt as a boy, concluded with life in Quebec, and ranged widely in between to include such subjects as mineral processing, photography, astronomy and St. Lawrence shipping.

In the early 1870's, Douglas began collaborating with Thomas Sterry Hunt to try and redeem an unfortunate investment his father had made in the Harvey Hill Copper Mines in Quebec. They invented the ingenious Hunt and Douglas Process. (A New Method for the Treatment of Mixed Copper, Silver and Gold Ores: with Appendices on the Saving of Salt and the Hunt and Douglas Copper Process was published in Quebec in 1875 and in Massachusetts and Colorado the following year.) On the basis of this research, Douglas obtained a number of commissions in the United States, and around 1875 he moved to Phoenixville, Pennsylvania, to take charge of the copper extraction plant of the Chemical Copper Co. In 1880, at the request of a New York company, he examined some copper claims at Bisbee, Arizona, and on his recommendation these claims were acquired as the nucleus of the Copper Queen Consolidated Mining Co., of which he became president. Due largely to his insight, the company expanded successfully in mining, smelting and railroad-ing, helping to develop the southwestern U.S. and resulting in the building in 1886 of the El Paso and Southeastern Railroad.

He founded a great smelting centre, named after him, at Douglas, Arizona, near the Mexican border. He became president of a number of important mining companies, including Phelps, Dodge and Co., Detroit Copper of Arizona and Montezuma Copper of Sonora, Mexico. His policy of publicity for metallurgical im-provements (openness being the best antidote to irresponsibility) helped to dispel secrecy and suspicion of technology in America—an important reform. He was also an early and tireless advocate of avoiding waste in all mining operations.

Douglas served as president of the American Institute

Books in Douglas Library pass million mark

Sometime during the past spring, someone quietly added the one millionth volume to the Douglas Library's holdings. The milestone volume will never be known. The passing of the million mark was discovered after a physical count of library re-sources at the end of June revealed that the total holdings of the library, including government documents, had reached a total of 1,037,694 books.

The Douglas Library, with a staff of 240, has now joined the University of Toronto and the University of Western Ontario as the only universities in Ontario to have library holdings of more than a million volumes.

In addition to books, the Douglas Library has over half a million other items: 412,000 microforms; 81,000 maps; 20,000 pamphlets; 6,200 musical scores; 5,000 sound recordings; 2,400 films and filmstrips; and 2,200 photographs. Holdings of the Archives are measured in shelf feet, and the latest count is 4,240 feet, the equivalent of more than a million pieces of paper.

At the end of June eight years ago, Queen's had about 492,000 volumes. Four years ago, the figure had reached 752,000, representing a growth rate of about 70,000 volumes a year since 1969. Will the Library continue to grow at this rate and reach two million volumes by 1981? Not likely, says Chief Librarian Donald A. Redmond. "But it is very likely that Douglas Library will be full before then—by 1977 or '78 at the latest, much more quickly than was predicted in 1966."

He adds that no special volume or celebration was planned to mark the occasion of passing the million mark. "Perhaps it's fitting for Queen's that we have been quietly at work, making good use of every budget dollar and of many large and small trust funds and donations. It is appropriate that the millionth book was one which someone on the campus needed for his work."

“He stated his interest in a very tangible way” of Mining Engineers, 1899-1900, and represented the U.S. at the Third International Mining Congress in Paris in 1900. He was a member and gold medallist (1906) of the Institution of Mining and Metallurgy (London). In 1915 he received the John Fritz Medal awarded by the American Institute of Mining Engineers for achievement in mining, metallurgy, education and industrial welfare. Annually since 1923 this institute has awarded the James Douglas gold medal for distinguished achievement in non-ferrous metallurgy.

In due course, the writing that he had begun with the Quebec historical society extended to various professional as well as general journals and books. His writing on mining, metallurgy and rail transport appeared in many technical publications in Canada, the U.S. and Britain.

The Transactions of the American Institute of Mining Engineers contain 17 of his professional papers written between 1890 and 1909. One of them sounds a rather trendy note today: “Conservation of Natural Resources”. So does “The Status of Women in New England and New France”, one of his historical works, reprinted in Queen's Quarterly, April 1912.

James Douglas' numerous philanthropies included bequests to educational, medical and engineering institutions. Possibly his largest single gift was 3½ grams of radium, valued at $375,000, to Memorial Hospital, New York City. He became a generous contributor to both Queen's and McGill. In 1899 he received an honorary doctorate from McGill, and he served on the McGill Board of Governors from 1911 until his death in 1918.

In 1910 he had stated his interest in the history of Canada in a very tangible way by endowing what is now designated the Douglas Chair in Canadian History at Queen's. The inaugural address of this professorship, “The Teaching of Colonial History,” was given in Grant Hall on October 19, 1910, by W.L. Grant. Together with “Canadian Political and National Progress—An Evaluation” by James Douglas, this lecture was published in the Queen's Quarterly of January 1911. This was the first such professorship in any Canadian university, and the endowment literally included the professorial chair. Douglas commissioned the chair to be designed and made by the daughter of a friend from his Quebec days. The chair and footstool of Burmese teak were made by Marguerite J. de Lotbinière Nanton during the winter of 1912 in Kashmir, where her husband was Deputy Director-General of Military Works for India. It was presented to Queen's at the Fall Convocation, October 16, 1913. The carvings on the chair's back include the coats of arms of the provinces of Canada below two heads symbolic of North America's past and future. The footstool bears the inscription Magna est Veritas. Today the Douglas Chair is in the fifth floor lounge in John Watson Hall, and the incumbent is Dr. W.R. Graham.

James Douglas was installed as third Chancellor of Queen's University in October 1915, capping an interest in his alma mater he had sustained since his graduation 57 years earlier. His installation came in the midst of the First World War, when Queen's was facing serious financial set-backs. Through the generosity of Dr. Douglas, these needs were all met. His gifts included $100,000 for general maintenance during the war years, $150,000 for the construction of the Library which bears his name, and $100,000 to aid the reconstruction of the Kingston General Hospital. Walter Douglas, one of his six sons, laid the cornerstone of the library on May 9, 1923. Hundreds of Queen's Medsmen have profited by his generosity to the hospital, and both the Douglas Wing and a large bronze plaque commemorate his involvement there. These and other Douglas gifts to the University totalled $900,000—a sum even more generous half a century ago than it appears today.

The portrait of the Chancellor by Sir Wyly Grier was presented to Queen's at Spring Convocation, 1942, on behalf of the Douglas family, by his son James Stuart of Montreal, who introduced the presentation with the words of the title and concluded with these words:

My father's love for his native land, Canada, was undiminished by his years of work and prosperity in the United States, and he remained and died a British subject. His remains rest on the bank of the St. Lawrence in the Mount Hermon Cemetery at Quebec.

Announcing the Cha Gheill Society

creeping uniformity

An informal organization of Queen'smen—the Cha Gheill Society—is being assembled to help guard the University's independence in an era of encroaching educational uniformity. The objective is to develop an enthusiastic and informed group of alumni and friends who will promote and maintain closer communications with Queen's.

Most graduates are well aware that voluntary support from the private sector is essential if Queen's is to continue as a highly distinctive university within what is now called "the Ontario system." Because this private financial help is becoming increasingly important, the Alumni Association feels that graduates and friends, in particular those who have shown a dedicated interest in Queen's, must be kept more fully apprised than ever before of her objectives and her plans to meet the inevitable challenges of the future. It is hoped the Cha Gheill Society, then, will have both a functional and psychological appeal to friends of Queen's, as well as a financial benefit to the University.

Membership is available to those who signify their intention to contribute $100 or more annually. Membership will be for the fiscal year in which the gift is made, but there will be no obligation to join each year. All gifts are deductible for income tax purposes.

Special arrangements are being made to ensure that members are kept informed concerning Queen's progress, plans for physical expansion, academic restructuring, financial needs for worthwhile projects that don't qualify for government funds, areas needing moral support, enrolment projections, and other prospects. There will be reunions for Cha Gheill Society members and these will be co-ordinated by the Alumni Association to coincide with significant events on campus. At such times, educational goals and requirements may be discussed informally with members of the faculty and administration. And there will be more opportunities made available for members to attend Queen's functions which appeal to their individual interests.

Solicitation for members of the Cha Gheill Society will officially begin on November 15, under the auspices of the Alumni Fund Committee. All those whose contributions to the current 1973-74 Alumni Fund fulfil the membership requirements will be invited to join as charter members. All this year's members will be Cha Gheill Society Founders and will be presented with an appropriate membership card.

Queen's Principal, Dr. John J. Deutsch, has given strong endorsement to the new program, calling it "an appropriate means of recognizing interested and active alumni and friends who show their commitment to excellence in learning and their belief in the unique qualities of Queen's through their generous and loyal support of the Annual Alumni Fund."

A few years ago, a brochure published on campus stated flatly—and erroneously—that Cha Gheill! was an untranslatable Gaelic battle cry. Far from being untranslatable, Cha Gheill! means “No surrender!” or “Won’t yield!”, and that strange off-stage noise is the sound of the composer, Alfred E. Lavell, spinning in his grave, aghast at the present generation which knows not Joseph.

In his own words (the original may be seen at the Alumni Office), Mr. Lavell set the record straight for once and for all in 1948, three years before his death. His letter reads, in part, as follows:

“Though of the Class of Arts ’91, a change of course left me at Queen’s in the autumn of 1891. The adoption of a yell was being urged. I favoured Gaelic because of Queen’s founders and traditions. The Alma Mater Society appointed a committee. I was asked to formulate a Gaelic yell. I decided on ‘Red, blue and yellow. Queen’s forever!’ in Gaelic, followed by an authentic Scottish war cry. Two Gaels, F.A. McRae and D. Cameron, did the translating for me. I got another Gael called McLean to read me a list of Scottish war cries. When he came to ‘Cha Gheill!’ I stopped him. ‘What does that mean?’ ‘Nil desperandum,’ he replied. The resulting yell was as follows:

Cha Gheill! Cha Gheill! Cha Gheill!
(translation)

Red! Blue! Yellow!
Queen’s forever!
No surrender!

Jarg, gormoos, boo-e-e-e (this last word drawn out on a rising note like a defiant Indian war whoop)
Hah Yale (or Yile)!

“Both Cha and Gheill should be emphasized. Cha should be one beat; Gheill should have two. It should be given as a clan would yell it when foes attacked them. It is an actual war cry heard many a time in the glens long ago.

“This yell was adopted by the committee October 9 and by the A.M.S. October 10, 1891. On October 24 (I was not present), the A.M.S. changed it. The Gaels took little interest, being horrified by our mispronunciation and profanation of the language of the Garden of Eden.

“This change cut out what to me was the best part of the yell, the ‘Red, blue and yellow.’ People living on Union St. told me that when the first yell was given October 10 by students coming north after the A.M.S. meeting, the wild shriek of the Dearg, gor’ mus, buidthe! was by far the most fearsome part and carried further.

“The yell as changed October 24, 1891, is the one used ever since, though often fearfully mispronounced and with wrong tempo, the Cha Gheill being quite too rapid and unconvincing.

“I have always hoped that some day the original yell would again be adopted. B.K. Sandwell, when Rector of Queen’s, had the same view. So have others.”

And so, far from being untranslatable, the Cha Gheill is really a distillation of what has come to be known as the Queen’s spirit, and ‘No surrender!’ or ‘Won’t yield!’, as others have translated it, sums up the whole of the history of the institution.

CHA GHEILL! CHA GHEILL! CHA GHEILL!

Alfred Lavell and his Gaelic yell

Tech Supplies becomes the Campus Bookstore (again)

During the registration rush, students with booklists almost as long as the lineups crowded the store from morning till night and moved about $500,000 worth of merchandise.

On September 4, Queen's took a step forward and a step back, both at once, when Technical Supplies became the Campus Bookstore.

It was a step forward in that the change of name caught up with changes well under way in the style of service in recent years. Looking back, though, the "new" name is the one used for 21 years after business began in a small way in a cranny of Fleming Hall, back in 1909. The tradition of Tech Supplies, both in service and in name, is a long one, and if the ghosts of Louie Bruce and "Slab" Drury, Sc. '09, and K.S. Clarke, Sc. '10, hover over Clark Hall these days, they must be very satisfied with what happened to their student scheme to beat the high cost of drafting supplies.

Emphasis at the Campus Bookstore is still on providing students and faculty with necessary texts and lab equipment at the lowest price. But supplementary supplies are far-ranging. Besides texts, trade and reference books, the Campus Bookstore sells stationery, gifts and gift wrapping, greeting cards, posters, LP records, souvenirs and novelties especially designed for Queen's, crested T-shirts, nightshirts and windbreakers, dissecting kits, slide rules and hard hats. Last year, Tech Supplies grossed more than a million dollars. During the peak registration period in September, a half-million dollars worth of stock was sold in just about three days.

The original sales staff—usually the President of the Engineering Society and whoever else he could commandeer—has grown to 25 persons: the manager, cashiers, office personnel, clerks who service the correspondence courses, shippers and receivers. The recent introduction of mechanized filing to the ordering system has increased tremendously the store's capacity for handling staff and student orders. Comprehensive catalogues let customers order any book that's in print anywhere in the world.

In the registration rush, the Bookstore looked like a supermarket, with up to 11 cash registers ringing from nine in the morning till eight at night. Overseer of this bustling enterprise is Frank Gauchie, who was hired in 1945 by Dean Clark and Dean-to-be Ellis and who succeeded A.M. "Brad" Bradburn in 1970. Brad had been manager since 1929. Frank works for QUESI, the incorporated, non-profit, service arm of the Engineering Society, which has operated Tech Supplies since 1964. (The initials stand for Queen's University Engineering Society Services Inc.)

What brought about the formal change of name after all this time? The process began in 1971 when the Senate set up a Task Force to look into the role of a bookstore for the proposed University Centre. Of the students surveyed about their book-buying habits, 95 percent said they purchased their assigned course books at Tech Supplies. The Task Force figured that a likely annual mean expenditure was $75 per student. Their survey also showed that the campus store managed to sell texts to Queen's students at the best prices in Canada. One reason that general, non-text books and sundries have been somewhat limited in the store has been the agreement, from its beginnings, that the campus store would avoid, as much as possible, direct competition with local retailers.

The upshot of months of Senate investigation, consultation and recommendations was a proposal that the University should take over the bookstore through a board of management responsible to the Senate and the Trustees. The Clark Hall location was to be kept for the time being, with necessary remodelling; the range of books and other goods for the student market was to be expanded; and text prices were to be raised to cover this expansion.

Someone finally thought to ask the Senate whether the University could afford to take over the store at a time when other universities are trying to get out of the book business. (Sixteen university bookstores have recently been handed over to independent operators and two others are for sale. One of the consultants to the Task Force was from McMaster University, whose subsidized bookstore operation is generally considered unique rather than typical.) Until a more thorough investigation of the financial implications of takeover is completed, business goes on quietly at Clark Hall, although QUESSI has already taken steps to broaden the store's scope as recommended by the Task Force.

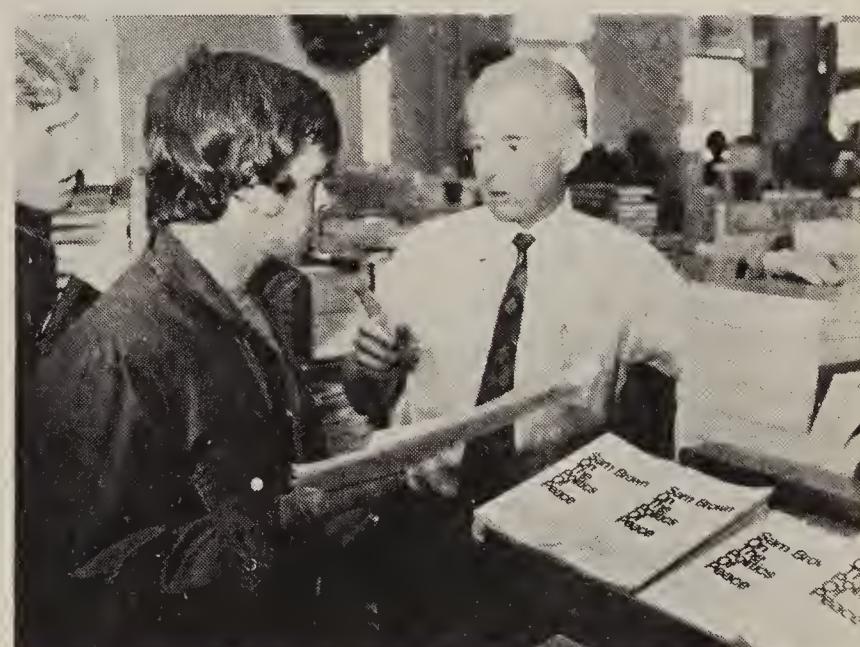

However, fired by the spirit of "Slim" Monture, Sc. '21, the Engineers' first full-time bookstore manager, and many fiercely independent Scincemen since, students of the Engineering Society are showing a general tendency to resist the University's takeover of the store they feel is an unquestionable success. And they're still waiting for someone from the Senate's Interim Bookstore Committee to consult with QUESSI, owners of the store in question, or with Frank Gauchie, an experienced man-about-books whose counsel is sought by other universities in Canada and the U.S. Students canvassed informally by the Engineers almost unanimously preferred to have necessary texts at discount prices rather than have a wider selection of reading that would force up the cost of texts.

While the political machinery grinds on with its protective slowness, the shelves keep filling and emptying with satisfying speed, and it's business as usual—and still with a discount of at least 5 percent.

According to a handbook distributed by QUESSI to incoming students during Orientation week, "Now, as through all its history, it is still the general store policy to sell texts at the lowest possible cost to the students." "Serving you, the student," it adds, "is our first and prime concern." The statement is signed, "Your management and staff."

This is the ground floor. Above it is a second, just as busy.

Biomedical liaison instituted with the Dominican Republic

The dedication of Dr. Sergio Bencosme, Professor of Pathology at Queen's, backed by Canadian financial support, has brought to life an international project to provide better health care for the people of the Dominican Republic, a Caribbean island nation.

The project will establish a Biomedical Institute in the Faculty of Health Sciences at the Universidad Nacional Pedro Henriquez Urena (UNPHU) in Santo Domingo and is expected to result in a medical academic liaison with the Faculty of Medicine and related clinical departments at Queen's.

The Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA) and friends of Queen's University with interests in the Dominican Republic have contributed more than $170,000 for the first year of operations. UNPHU has provided some facilities and salaries. The program is projected over a five-year period.

For the first year, Dr. Bencosme will direct operations while on sabbatical leave from Queen's. He was born in the Dominican Republic and is now a Canadian citizen. After his return to Queen's in 1974, he will maintain a co-directorship of the Institute with the Dean of the Faculty of Health Sciences at UNPHU and will spend at least two months a year there through 1978.

In association with the teaching hospitals of UNPHU—which are public hospitals supported by the Dominican government and serve the low-income areas of Santo Domingo—the Institute aims to improve general health care delivery throughout the country by training health science and paramedical personnel.

A part of the Institute's work will be the study of breast cancer, which has a high incidence in the Dominican Republic. This will be under the personal direction of Dr. Bencosme.

At the end of five years, it is hoped the project and the Institute will be supported entirely by UNPHU, the Dominican government and private contributions.

Queen's one of few universities to hit enrolment targets

By early August, all faculties at Queen's had filled their enrolment requirements, making Queen's one of only three Ontario universities to do so. Full-time enrolment has now passed the 9,000 mark, with more than 2,300 new first-year students. Enrolment levels actually surpass targets set in 1970 when the University embarked on a plan to reach a steady state of 10,000 students by 1975. Projections for 1973-74 called for 8,900 students, including 2,100 freshmen.

About 1,500 students took the 78 courses and half-courses at this year's six-week Summer School, the 64th annual session at Queen's. A slight decline in enrolment was credited to several factors: (a) the degree requirement for elementary school teachers which has led to their enrolling in regular full-time sessions; (b) expansion of the university system, with new universities drawing students from areas formerly served by Queen's; (c) a shift to evening summer classes at universities in metropolitan areas; and (d) more summer jobs available to students.

The Faculty of Education had 900 students in its Summer School Certificate program—a figure that represents a levelling off. However, McArthur Hall has seen a four-fold increase in the number of persons taking part in the non-credit professional development program in the fields of teaching, social work, and nursing.

Other Ontario universities have seen their professional programs filled, but Arts and Science have been hard hit by decreases. Besides having a drop in applications from high schools, many universities lost several hundred students between first and second year.

WORN OUT BY DEGREES

This mortarboard has been part of Convocation ceremonies since Chancellor J.B. Stirling's installation in 1960. During the past 13 years, Queen's has awarded 19,998 degrees by examination, and the Chancellor has used his mortarboard, with no mean amount of vigour, to tap an estimated 11,000 graduands on the shoulder as they received their academic hoods. For the 1973 ceremonies, some cosmetic surgery was required, but the mortarboard is now ready for its final duties at the Fall Convocation on October 19, which is being held by the School of Graduate Studies and Research in Grant Hall. This will be the last Convocation presided over by Chancellor Stirling before he retires from his University post.

'Atoms for Peace' winner to spend fall term on campus

Dr. W. Bennett Lewis, D.Sc. '60, one of Canada's leading atomic energy specialists and an applied scientist of international stature, has been appointed Distinguished Professor of Science in Queen's Department of Physics. He recently retired as Senior Vice-President (Science) of Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. He will retain his residence at Deep River, near Chalk River, and spend the fall term at Queen's, sharing his wide experience with many members of the campus community, as well as his host department.

The best known of Dr. Lewis's many accomplishments is the design and development of heavy-water reactor systems at Chalk River. Four of the resultant CANDU reactors are presently in use at Ontario Hydro's nuclear power station at Pickering and are proving to be among the most reliable electrical-energy generating systems in the world.

Dr. Lewis has also pursued such diverse projects as statistics for the study of epidemics, especially childhood cancer; electrical methods of producing neutrons; toxicity of mercury in man's environment; radioactive waste management; and electronic communications to bring library and other services into the home.

Tributes to his achievements include the Outstanding Achievement Award of the Public Service of Canada (1966); the international Fermi 'Atoms for Peace' Award (1967); and the Royal Medal of the Royal Society of London, England (1972).

Commenting on the appointment, Principal John J. Deutsch said Queen's was "honoured to have in its midst such a distinguished member of the engineering and scientific community."

Dr. M.G. Joneja, Professor in Anatomy Department, dissects a pregnant mouse to check for fetal abnormalities. Looking on are his assistants, medical student Angelo Campagna and research technician Virginia Bartley.

Is marijuana linked to birth defects?

As the controversy about the dangers of marijuana continues, a study is under way at Queen's to determine if use of the drug is related to birth defects and genetic damage.

Dr. M.G. Joneja, Ph.D. '65, of the Anatomy Department has received a $19,000 research grant from the Department of Health and Welfare and the Medical Research Council. To study the effects of marijuana, he is injecting pregnant mice with controlled doses of Tetrahydrocannabinol (THC), believed to be the most significant psychoactive component of marijuana, and analyzing the abnormalities of their offspring. The research may indicate that THC has similar effects on human fetal development.

A preliminary study conducted last summer (1972) showed indications of significant growth retardation in the fetus, an increase in fetal mortality and a low incidence of defects in the nervous system and palate formation.

Dr. Joneja is also looking at long-term effects on the chromosome structure in mice, first in bone marrow cells and then in fetal cells, to see if THC produces damage to genetic material in the dividing cells.

Admissions experiment has "special" students

This fall, 55 full-time students are attending Queen's as part of the Special Admissions Project in the Faculty of Arts and Science. The project is a direct result of a major recommendation made by the Admissions Committee of the University Council and approved last year by the Senate.

The final selection of applicants followed a regional campaign to attract persons who did not meet formal university requirements but who showed academic potential. Most of the special students are between the ages of 18 and 21, are not graduates of high school, and have never attended university.

Dr. Gerritt J.S. Wilde of the Psychology Department, chairman of the project, reports that the successful applicants constitute a non-typical group with a wide variety of reasons for entering University.

After the initial applications were received (in response mostly to newspaper advertisements), a more detailed application was sent to 220 people and, of these, 80 were invited to Queen's for an extensive series of tests for ability and academic promise. After testing, the final group was narrowed down and 55 offers of admission to the Faculty of Arts and Science were made.

Parking Garage opens under playing field on Lower Campus

Early in September, much of the parking congestion around the Queen's campus and Kingston General Hospital was eased by the opening of the new Queen's-K.G.H. underground parking garage.

The split-level garage, with capacity for 665 vehicles, was built under the playing field on the Lower Campus. Sod has already been replaced and the playing field should be back in use next summer, better graded and drained than ever.

Vehicle entrance and exit ramps are off Stuart St. at the end of Lower University Ave. Pedestrians have four accesses—three in front of Kingston Hall and one on the north side of Stuart St. A tunnel under Stuart St. connects the garage to Etherington Hall.

The parking project is operated by the recently formed Queen's-K.G.H. Parking Commission, which consists of representatives from the University, the hospital and the City of Kingston. It recommends rates, regulations, and policies to the Queen's-K.G.H. Liaison Committee. Parking is open to everyone. Rates are 25¢ an hour, $2 a day, or $15 a month.

Now that the garage has taken off so much parking pressure, some of the small lots in the campus core will be converted to green areas.

Entrance Bursaries boosted to $500; Alumni to help screen applicants

This year Queen's will again offer 30 entrance bursaries to students from the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and provinces other than Ontario and Quebec. The bursaries have been increased to $500 and will be awarded on the basis of merit and need. They are open to Canadian citizens and landed immigrants.

Departments of Extension and Summer Schools (CADESS). The membership was given during the annual meeting at Laval University and is a tribute to the work Dr. Curran did between 1952 and 1971 for the Department of Extension and its students across Canada and to his efforts in the formation of CADESS.

Queen's alumni in key areas will again be asked to screen applicants and to forward nominations. Final selection will be made by the Senate Committee on Scholarships and Student Aid.

The bursaries are being advertised in high schools in the areas concerned.

Application forms may be obtained from the Assistant Registrar (Student Awards), Queen's University, Kingston, Ont.

Two retired faculty earn tribute of peers

Miss Marion Ross, former Director of Women's Athletics at Queen's, received the R. Tait McKenzie Award of Honour at the biennial conference of the Canadian Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation, held in Calgary this summer. Miss Ross was cited for "distinguished service to the profession and unremitting zeal in promoting its aims and objectives." She was Director of Women's Athletics at Queen's from 1934 until her retirement in 1971, and the Ross Gymnasium in the Physical Education Centre is named after her.

Dr. H. Wesley Curran, former Director of Extension, has been presented with honorary life membership in the Canadian Association of

Nominations for Honorary Degrees

Recently the Senate established a Committee on Honorary Degrees to have full responsibility for making recommendations to the Senate for the award of Honorary Degrees. The Committee is composed of the Chancellor, the Principal and Vice-Chancellor, the Rector, the President of the A.M.S., representatives from Queen's Theological College, all Faculties and Schools and the General Alumni, with the Registrar (ex-officio) to act as Secretary. It is hoped that with this wide representation, all parts of the University community will have the opportunity to submit nominations for Honorary Degrees.

Eligibility Guidelines

The Committee on Honorary Degrees has adopted the following eligibility rules as guidelines in selecting the 1974 Honorary Degree candidates. These guidelines will be developed more fully as the work of the Committee proceeds.

- (a) To be recommended for an Honorary Degree, the candidate should have made a distinctive contribution in his or her discipline or field of work.
- (b) Active members of Queen's staff are not to be recommended.
- (c) Retired members of staff are not to be recommended immediately upon retirement.
- (d) Normally an active politician should not be recommended. An exception may be made in the case of a person who has been a politician for a considerable length of time and has made a particularly outstanding contribution.
- (e) Posthumous degrees will not be recommended.

Nominations Invited by December 1

The Committee on Honorary Degrees is now inviting nominations for the award of Honorary Degrees at the 1974 Spring Convocations. These nominations must be submitted to the Registrar by 1 December, 1973. Nominations received after that date will not be considered for 1974.

The following information should be included with each nomination:

- (a) name in full
- (b) permanent address
- (c) a brief biographical outline (including education and employment)
- (d) reasons for recommending the award of an Honorary Degree.

Professor's invention finds U.S. manufacturer

After a two-year search through Canada and the U.S., a manufacturer has been found for the Vortex Clarifier invented by Dr. J.D. Broadway, (M.Sc. '65, Ph.D. '66), a Civil Engineering professor at Queen's. Bird Machine Co. Ltd. of South Walpole, Massachusetts, has acquired the worldwide license—under patents already granted in Canada and pending in the U.S. and other countries—to develop and market the device.

The Vortex Clarifier is capable of removing fine suspended solids from liquid effluents at a greater rate than conventional tank or filter methods. It employs the principle of a 'forced vortex', and rotates the liquid at an acceleration of 400 to 3200 times gravity, depending on the size and speed of the unit. Retention time is approximately 40 seconds in contrast to four or more hours in a settling tank.

Dr. Broadway's invention could have wide applications in the treatment of municipal and industrial water and wastes. In the paper industry, for example, the clarifier could recover valuable fibre and filler for return to the processing cycle. Dr. Broadway was associated with the paper industry for several years before taking up graduate studies at Queen's. He has other inventions to his credit, including several forms of hydraulic cyclone, a conical whirlwind device used to separate particles from liquids in the manufacture of paper.

As Her Majesty said to the Chancellor. . .

A recent letter from Her Majesty's private secretary to Queen's Chancellor J.B. Stirling has expressed the royal couple's pleasure in the civic dinner held on campus during the Royal Visit in June. The letter, which accompanied a signed photograph, said in part:

"The Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh greatly enjoyed the dinner and reception at Leonard Hall, and Her Majesty considered it most appropriate that the dinner given by Kingston in the City's Tercentenary Year should be held in the University, thus demonstrating the strong bonds of affection between 'town and gown' in Kingston."

A First at Queen's

Mrs. Veena Rawat is the first woman to qualify for a doctorate in Electrical Engineering at Queen's. Her thesis was titled, "Unorthodox transmission lines for continuous access guided communication." Her husband Surrendra also completed his Ph.D. in the same field this summer.

Toronto Alumnae elect Executive at lively meeting

The Toronto Branch of the Alumnae was joined by the national association at its Spring Luncheon and Annual Meeting, held May 5 at the new Granite Club. More than 160 alumnae renewed acquaintances and heard an address by Dr. Hilda Neatby. Convener was Mrs. Pat Sharp. Grace was said by Honorary President, Mrs. Lilyan Wiley.

The short annual meeting was conducted by Mrs. Lynne Gaetz, who took over the presidency late last year when Mrs. Mary Collins moved to Sudbury. The national president, Miss Gladys Heintz, spoke of changes taking place in the branches and of the need to re-evaluate the aims and the role of the Alumnae Association. Recording Secretary Mrs. Ann Hansen reported on the year's activities in Toronto, and Miss Cathy Paterson made the Treasurer's report.

Since the Alumnae have been combining efforts more and more with the Alumni in Toronto, a committee has been set up to study a possible merger. According to Mrs. Gaetz, it would seem to be more a question of the men joining the ladies than the other way around, since the Alumnae are the more active group.

The guest speaker was introduced by Mrs. Kay Bowley of Peterborough, who had worked with her on the Massey Commission (1951). Dr. Neatby, who is completing a new history of Queen's, regaled the alumnae with a study of the influence exerted by the founders and early principals on the university's growth and the development of the "Queen's spirit"—their contribution seemingly determined by the presence in their make-up of one or more of the combined lowland and highland characteristics of "perseverance, prudence, parsimony and passion."

A slate of officers for 1973-74, proposed by Nominating Convener Mrs. Jerry Gray, was accepted and is as follows:

President, Mrs. J.S. Gaetz (Lynne Johnson), Com. '60. Vice-presidents, Katherine Segsworth, Arts '66; Mrs. D.A. Sharp (Pat Tyrrell), Com. '61; and Mrs. H.E.J. Donaldson (Helen Eakin), Arts '36. Recording Secretary, Mrs. M. Hansen (Ann Daniels), Arts '52. Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. A.G. Stollery (Roslyn Kaye), Arts '69. Treasurer, Catherine Paterson, Arts '70. Social Convener, Mrs. J.A. Horton (Carolyn McLenaghan), Arts '63.

Mrs. Wiley (Lilyan Cochrane), Arts '15, is Honorary President. Past Presidents are Mrs. D.J. Collins (Mary Wilkins), Arts '61, and Mrs. E.R. Gray (Jerry Barclay), Arts '47. Mrs. Gray is also Nominating Convener.

The Toronto Globe and Mail said, "Mr. St. Laurent was the first Canadian Prime Minister to achieve true international stature."

A TRIBUTE TO EDITH MacARTHUR DEYELL

by Mollie E. Cottingham

A host of students and colleagues across Canada were saddened by the death, March 7, of Miss Edith Deyell, distinguished teacher, scholar and writer. Few educators have so widely dispersed the influence of their example, talents and energies over such an extensive body of young people during a long and fruitful career.

Miss Deyell was born in South Monaghan, near Peterborough, Ont., where she attended high school and Teachers' College, and she taught her first classes in a one-roomed country school with about 30 pupils, along Rice Lake. Then she entered Queen's University and graduated with an Honours B.A. in English and History. During summers she worked on the Canadian Chatauqua circuit. From there she went to the Ontario College of Education where she prepared for teaching at the secondary level. Unfortunately, these were depression years. Between 700 and 800 teachers graduated from O.C.E. that year to compete for 100 vacancies in all Ontario—and men were preferred for teaching history.

Edith turned again to the Chatauqua circuit. After six months, an opening came on the Ottawa public school staff and there she taught, with interruptions at two intervals, until her appointment as an inspector in 1954. One interruption came when she joined the C.W.A.C. during World War II, became a captain and served in Vancouver in the Directorate of Personnel Selection, interviewing and examining women recruits.

While in the army she began her career as an historian. When war ended, she was chosen to write the record of her directorate for the military files, and the three-month project proved to be the turning point in her career. Once she began to write, she could not stop. Before returning to teaching in Ottawa, she went to Winnipeg with the C.W.A.C., and during demobilization she served in Kingston as a counsellor for the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Next stop was Columbia University, New York, where she took her Master's degree in history. She returned to Ottawa in 1949 to teach intermediate grade pupils. With access to the Archives, she did much of her research for two history volumes which were to have a broad and lasting influence on Canadian boys and girls of grades 7 and 8.

Canada—A New Land and Canada—The New Nation, first published in 1959, are invested with a colour, warmth and excitement derived from the personal way in which they are written.

In 1954 Miss Deyell was chosen to be an inspector, one of a team of three to supervise eight public schools in Wentworth County. This was a rare appointment for a woman, there being only two other women inspectors in the province. Her natural wit and charm, together with her extensive experience, soon put her in demand as a public speaker.

In commenting on her work as an inspector, she once said: "Teaching is getting children to work for themselves from the standpoint of interest. . . When we are doing good teaching, we do not need anyone to tell us so. We can see it in the children's faces and responses; we can feel it in our own heightened emotions and in our deepened understandings. We find it constantly spurring us to set higher goals for ourselves. I can think of no more satisfying work."

This philosophy and background were invaluable when she came in 1960 to take an appointment as Associate Professor in the Faculty of Education at U.B.C., where she lectured in methods of teaching social studies and supervised practice teaching. Colleagues and students alike were inspired by her example, and when illness beset her, admiration for her courage was unbounded.

Before her retirement from U.B.C. in April 1972, despite a heavy schedule of lectures and recurring bouts of ill health, she co-authored three books: Teaching History and Geography and Making Canadian History, Books 1 and 2. Fortunately, her health in her last two years improved enough to let her travel both in Canada and abroad, and from her research in Denmark she had prepared a study for young people, ready for publication.

Many hundreds have discussed with her and with each other ideas newly awakened by her classroom questioning, and afterward sat in her office to pour out their hopes and fears and receive her advice, always gently given. Her courage, her bright spirit and her tremendous human understanding remained an inspiration to all of us who knew her. She was a great Canadian educator and we are all the better for her example and her friendship. Mollie E. Cottingham is Professor Emerita, Faculty of Education, University of British Columbia, and a former president of the Canadian College of Teachers.

TRIBUTE FROM OTTAWA

Dr. Charlotte Whitton, Arts '17, LL.D. '41, was honoured recently when the Council Chamber of the City of Ottawa was dedicated "Whitton Hall." Dr. Whitton, recuperating from a broken hip, attended the proceedings and gave an address. Among the communications extending greetings were messages from Her Majesty the Queen, His Excellency the Governor General, the Prime Minister of Canada, and the Prime Minister of Ontario.

The Ottawa Journal commented editorially as follows: "Ottawa City Council could not have hit upon a more appropriate way to perpetuate Charlotte Whitton's name than to name the city's council chamber in her honour. The fitness of the gesture is not only that the place was the scene of her service, but that no one has ever held higher concept of the role of alderman, controller, or mayor. Miss Whitton's sense of history identifies those offices with the first forms of responsible government as they emerged in medieval England. She always lived with a sense of the continuity and the essential dignity of offices which sometimes seemed less important than other titles in a capital city. The high and the sometimes dramatic seriousness which she brought to civic deliberations and occasions were inspired by that sense of history as much as her own instinctive temperament for combat. Now generations of civic leaders will work in a chamber whose name should inspire a deep respect for their office and work, a passionate feeling for integrity. Well called, Whitton Hall!"

The Queen's Tea Room at the corner of Division and Union streets has become part of Queen's history after being part of the campus scene for more than 60 years. It started as a grocery store, became a so-called cafeteria, then a cafe and finally Queen's Tea Room, the name it wore for 35 years or so. Many also knew it as "Charlie Lazonga's." It provided meals or snacks for generations of students, and its upstairs quarters had been a dance hall, a place for reunions, and the scene of many year parties, dinners and other gatherings. In latter years it acquired brick siding and was divided into a rabbit warren of small apartments, and many students roomed there. When Goodwin Hall was built in 1971-72, the University had purchased all the houses along Union St. east to Barrie St. with the exception of the Tea Room property, a holdout. Finally Queen's was able to buy the property last spring and it was razed.

MARTY MEMORIAL SCHOLARSHIP

VALUED AT $3,500

Established by the Queen's University Alumnae Association in memory of Dr. Aletta Marty

Any woman graduate of Queen's University with a Master's degree or equivalent may hold this scholarship, which is awarded annually for a year of study and research at the graduate school of a recognized university. Candidates must have the Master's degree when they hold the scholarship, but not necessarily when they apply for it.

A committee chosen by the Alumnae Association makes the award. The scholarship may be awarded to the same person for a second year.

Conditions

Application forms may be obtained from the Registrar, Queen's University at Kingston. They must be returned to the Registrar by February 1, 1974, with the following information:

1. List of universities attended, with dates and degree or degrees received, together with a transcript of work done at universities other than Queen's. A statement of examinations passed at Queen's need not be sent.
2. List of foreign languages which the candidate can read and/or speak.
3. Information about service given as reader, tutor or demonstrator during university course.
4. (a) Statement of interest and activities other than academic and professional work.
(b) Statement of any business or professional positions held.
5. List of publications (if any).
6. Name of university at which candidate proposes to study.
7. Outline of proposed plan of study.
8. Statement of other scholarship applications, if any.
9. Names and addresses of three persons from whom confidential information may be obtained about academic and personal qualifications. These persons must include two professors, one of whom is a professor under whom the candidate is presently studying or has recently studied. If the candidate has recently held employment related to her field of research, the third letter of reference should come from her employer. Otherwise she should ask a third professor, who can vouch for the quality of her scholarship, to send a letter on her behalf.
10. The acceptance of the scholarship obligates the scholar to devote herself to study and research during the term of the award. The successful candidate must send to the Chairman two reports, the first at the middle point of her year of study, and the second at the conclusion of the year.
11. The first instalment of the scholarship, normally $2,000, is payable at the beginning of the programme of study. The second instalment of $1,500 is paid on the receipt of the first report.

$55,000 and COUNTING!

YOU'RE KEEPING QUEEN'S IN ORBIT

The 1973-74 Alumni Fund left the launching pad May 1, headed for a new target of $220,000. Control of this year's program is again largely in the hands of Queen's 32,000 graduates, who hit an all-time high of $202,000 in gifts for '72-'73.

On May 1 the first stage was ignited by a direct mail appeal. By September 1 the Fund had climbed to $55,000, matching the momentum of the '72-'73 Fund.

Stage Two is programmed to cut in during late November in the form of a second appeal by mail. To help the Fund maintain the optimum flight path, "Mission Control" (or your Alumni Fund Committee) has scheduled class-reunion giving projects, wind-up Telethons and the like for the Fund's final months, prior to April 30.

Last year 4,200 alumni and friends of Queen's made contributions to the Annual Fund. Barring five major gifts, the median gift was just over $30. Success this year depends on the continuing generosity of previous benefactors, plus the participation of those who find themselves able to give for the first time. If 2,000 of the Queen's graduates who did not participate last year were to send in half the average gift, the current Fund would splash down safely and successfully by April 30 on its $220,000 target.

Dr. Deutsch Retiring as Principal Next Fall

Principal John J. Deutsch advised the Board of Trustees at its October meeting that he wishes to relinquish his position as of October 1, 1974. He intends to remain at Queen's as Professor of Economics and has said he will also continue doing "odd jobs" for the federal government as they come up. (He described these undertakings as "specific temporary assignments" and not full-time positions.)

Dr. Deutsch told the Trustees: "When I retire a year from now, I will be in my 64th year and will have completed more than six years in this very challenging but demanding post. I am convinced that it is time to make way for a younger man. The developments and programs with which I have been closely associated at Queen's are coming to completion, and it is an appropriate time for a change in leadership. I am deeply grateful for the generous support and understanding which I have received at all times from the Board of Trustees, faculty, staff, students and alumni."

With reluctance, the Board accepted Dr. Deutsch's decision, and by November 1 a search committee had been established by Trustees and Senators to find a new Principal.

Board Chairman J. Douglas Gibson paid tribute to "Dr. Deutsch's warm concern for the welfare of Queen's students, his dedicated leadership in advising, persuading and exhorting his colleagues in effective co-operative effort, his much-admired habit of intelligent hard work, and his deep interest in key matters of social concern to Canadians at large, which has always been coupled with a boundless loyalty to his Alma Mater."

The Queen's Journal also noted the announcement in the following editorial: "In the years he has served at Queen's in the capacity of Principal, Vice-Principal and Professor, Dr. John J. Deutsch has earned the respect and admiration of Queen's students.

"It is not our intention, and it would be largely impossible, to enumerate his achievements. However, his contribution to Queen's has been outstanding and, indeed, worthy of respect. His dedication and efforts will be long remembered by the students at this university.

"As an economist, administrator and humanitarian, he is well known. More importantly, we feel, as an individual Dr. Deutsch is warm, receptive and concerned."

The most recent honour to the Principal was an honorary degree (his eleventh), presented by the Université de Moncton as part of its tenth anniversary celebrations. Dr. Deutsch was one of three men honoured as founders of the Université, which was created by provincial act of legislature in 1963 following recommendations of a Royal Commission which he chaired.

A REPORT
ON

Women in the University

by SANDRA BERNSTEIN

Sister Catherine Wallace: "They may have to do it in court."

What happens when the Status of Women Committees finish their investigations? What is the nature of women's studies programs in Canada? What problems are posed by the two-career family? Where are Canadian University women heading?

These were some of the questions examined at the second national conference on Women in the University, held at Queen's during the annual meetings of Canada's Learned Societies. Almost 200 students, professors, administrators, professionals from the community and others (including three men) registered for two days of meetings and workshops. They represented 33 institutions of learning and 24 professional organizations and publications, from Vancouver to Newfoundland.

The conference began with regional reports briefly describing the progress of various universities and colleges in such fields as status of women, women's studies, staff organizations, women's liberation groups on campus, day-care facilities, female enrolment in professional schools, and women's representation on governing bodies.

Delegates then divided into smaller groups for workshops led by Dr. Margrit Eichler of the University of Waterloo (Status of Women Committees: their origins, types of data collected, categories of workers studied, confidentiality problems, etc.) and Mary Ellen Johnson, a Queen's Law professor ("Family Relations"). A third group concerned itself with "Feminism as a Philosophy."

Prof. Greta Nemiroff of Sir George Williams University questioned the validity of teaching "women's studies" in the university environment, citing statistics which show how university structures exclude females and how existing disciplines—literature and philosophy, for example—either ignore or underplay female aspects.

Professor Nemiroff defined sociology as "the female's invisibility institutionalized" and described women's history as "nearly non-existent." "We cannot," she added, "have more of the present token courses, such as Women's Literature for the Last 5,000 Years—one term." She also declared that "calling women's studies 'that women's lib course' is like referring to a course on some 16th century African tribe as 'that Black Panther course.'

"Women have the potential and ability to have careers," she concluded, "and education for women just in case must end." Proper funding for women's study programs is important, she emphasized, and cited the massive Ford Foundation grants in this area as signs of things to come.

Subsequent workshops took up such topics as strategies and tactics in establishing women's studies; social and psychological dynamics in teaching women's courses; women's centres and community education; and the philosophical bases of women's studies.

The keynote address of the conference was presented by Gail Stewart (Gail Ward), B.A. '54, M.Sc. (London), former member of the Economic Council of Canada. (Excerpts from "One Woman's Thoughts: Challenging Society's Assumptions" appear separately.)

What happens when the discussion stops and these women write their reports?

At the business meeting of the conference, held the second day, a resolution was passed calling for participants to urge their provincial governments and other funding agencies to withhold grants from universities and colleges which discriminate on the basis of sex. To place the burden of proof on the institutions, the resolution called for periodic publication of data about progress in this area.

Some uncommon challenges in the Ban Righ Common Room: Gail Stewart scores a point in her keynote address. Dean Reid is on left.

A panel discussion followed on "What happens when the Status of Women committees finish their work?" Panelists were Jill Conway (Canadian Association of University Teachers), Esther Greenglass (Ontario Federation of Faculty Associations), Aline Gregory (National Action Committee on the Status of Women) and Sister Catherine Wallace (President of Mount St. Vincent University and representative of the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada). One highlight was Dr. Wallace's observation that "if Canadian universities want to join the Ivy League, they may well have to do it in court." She was referring to the numerous suits brought against American universities as a result of sex discrimination.

The final afternoon was devoted to media presentations: a display of publications of special interest to women; films, many of them Canadian, on themes as diverse as women in Canada, guidance counselling, venereal disease, and the life of Virginia Woolf and other individual women; videotaped interviews and readings from patriarchal literature; and a fast-moving slide show with music. Participants were interested to learn about the many women active in film distribution and to see the results of their work. One film—an educational cartoon about VD—was made by a Queen's student, Kiloran German.

The conference was planned by a group of Queen's students, professors and administrators, headed by Dean of Women, Evelyn Reid. Among the planners were Eleanor Beach, B.A. '65, who has been assistant to the Dean for the past year, and Sharon Singer, B.Ed. '72, currently with the University's Birth Control and Abortion Referral Service.

For the conference, Beth Michalska (Elizabeth Roach), B.A. '71, a former worker with the Kingston Women's Centre, returned to Queen's from Carleton, where she is working on a Master's degree in developmental and socializational psychology.

Besancourt Publishing, described as "a personal publishing company specializing in publications of limited appeal," has been the major concern of Margherita Ten Cate (M. Flueler), B.N.Sc. '65. She was recently elected provincial director of the Canadian Federation of University Women.

Jean Malach (Jean Foster), B.A. '46, B.L.S. (Toronto), formerly with the Douglas Library at Queen's, attended the conference as chief cataloguer at R.M.C.'s Massey Library, a position she has held since 1966.

Another participant, Susan Miklas (Susan Berry), B.A. '64, has completed a year in the Faculty of Law and plans a career in the legal profession.

Carol Vine (Carol Collier), M.A. '58, represented the SCM Bookroom, Toronto, which provided a wide-ranging display of literature by and

§ Business and income and, more important, legitimacy, flow increasingly to those who need it least, to lawyers and civil servants, to tax consultants, academics, social workers, accountants, doctors, commissioners, technocrats, managers, land developers. And, among women, to narrowly rational and articulate professional women. In short, the character of our response to our problems is usually such as to reinforce the very structures and qualities in our society which are generating the problems we are attempting to meet.

§ I find the idea of a Declaration of Interdependence appealing—a confession of how dependent we are upon each other—men and women, children and adults, students and teachers, managers and workers—and how dependent we are upon our natural environment and it upon us.

§ It would not surprise me if the problem of women in the very near future was that of dealing with power, personal and institutional, rather than with the lack of it.

The Golden Gaels failed to make the play-offs this year, but they had a winning season, with five victories in eight games, and in the process played some pretty good football.

The trouble was that they were inconsistent. When they were good they were very, very good, and when they were bad, they were disappointing. They came up with the best placement kicker in the memory of the Oldest Inhabitant, in the person of John Wintermeyer, a new arrival from Kitchener, who managed to kick 18 between the uprights, a new league record. This meant not only that Mr. Wintermeyer was consistently accurate, but that he was given an inordinate number of opportunities to perform his specialty because the offence had bogged down.

There were other stars. Dave "The Beast" Hadden led the group in rushing, with 846 yards in 95 carries, for an 8.9 average. In every game he was good for a long dash and in several games he ripped off several. Many of his gains were the result of second effort, and it took more than one tackler to stop his spinning, twisting, diving rushes.

Stu Lang was another who showed to good advantage. He was third in rushing, with 655 yards in 101 carries, for a 6.5 average. Alex Melvin, son of Dr. Jim Melvin, showed a sure pair of hands, and some of his catches bordered on the sensational, as did those of Barry St. George. Darryl Penner, son of Bo-Bo, Joe Pal, Peter McNabb, John Tovee, John Waddell and Captain Dave Whiteside had their moments of glory. Hadden and Penner were named as all-stars in the East grouping, and Hadden was selected for the All-Canadian all-star team.

The success of the season depended on the home-and-home tilts with Toronto and Ottawa. In their first encounter with the Blues, played in a driving rain at Richardson Stadium, the Gaels won 27-9, turning in one of their best performances of the year under the most unfavorable conditions. The turning point was a blocked punt which Darryl Penner gathered in and ran half the length of the field for a TD.

Unfortunately it didn't rain when the Gaels invaded Toronto, and the Blues took this one 48-6. The Gaels could do nothing right, and Varsity quarterback Wayne Dunkley picked the defence to pieces, to the disappointment of the large contingent of Queen's supporters.

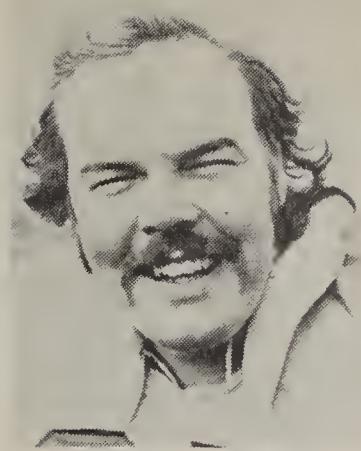

Ottawa Gee-Gees, who were the division winners, knocked off the Gaels 27-14 and 37-16. In the first encounter the Gaels were in the game all the way, and actually dominated the statistics except where they counted—on the scoreboard. They could and did move the ball, but in close were frustrated time and again. In the second game the Gaels hurt their own cause with errors and penalties when they couldn't afford any lapses whatever.

In Guelph, Queen's won 33-14. The Gryphons scored a touchdown the first time they had their hands on the ball, but thereafter the Gaels were in charge. Quarterback Tom Taylor passed for two TD's, and the defence forced several profitable turnovers. When the Carleton Ravens came to town they were turned back 21-13. The Gaels looked anything but impressive in this one, and only John Wintermeyer's record five placements turned the tide in their favour. The McMaster Marauders were thumped 33-14 when they invaded Richardson Stadium. A highlight was Tom Taylor's 50-yard toss to Barry St. George, who took the ball on the goal-line with two defenders practising togetherness with him, probably the most spectacular play of the year. The season closed with a 30-22 win over York Yeomen. They did this the hard way, going into the fourth quarter down 22 to zilch and lucky not to be further off the pace. Then, behind back-up quarterback Doug Latham, the Gaels exploded for touchdowns by Stu Lang, Greg Anderson, and Alex Melvin. With less than two minutes to go, Wintermeyer kicked a 38-yard placement to give the Gaels the lead 23-22. An interception provided another opportunity and Lang scored a TD with nine seconds left on the clock.

Thus concluded another season for veteran coach Frank Tindall who, with his staff, as usual produced a team that represented Queen's in worthy fashion. This year Frank had to get along without the services of his perennial assistant, Hal "Moose" McCarney, who packed it in after 21 years and more farewell appearances than Sarah Bernhart. Frank got good help from Bill Miklas, who now becomes his strong right hand, and from Jim McKeen, Bob Climie, and Gord McLellan.

Dave Hadden, Gaels' fullback, evades a swarm of McMaster tacklers. Hadden was the league's leading rusher, with 846 yards on 95 carries, for an average of 8.9 yards. He was named to the all-star team.

The weekend of October 26-28 brought the biggest turn-out in years of alumni celebrating the 50th anniversary of their graduation. Including spouses and a remarkable 80 percent of Science '23, about 230 filled Wallace Hall for the official dinner. Graduates and their families meant a total of 1500 visitors. They came all the way from Alberta and Newfoundland, from California, South Carolina, Kentucky, New England and Washington, D.C.

They brought with them sunny weather and enough enthusiasm to push the Gaels to victory over McMaster—and they also gave the current crop of students tangible evidence that Queen's spirit wears well over the years.

Half the fun is trading tales. Ian MacLachlan of Kingston snapped his Arts '23 classmates Edgar Lockett, Kingston, Arthur Torrie and Philip Terry, both of Scarborough, chatting on Saturday morning outside the Union.

Missing: Hazel (Bigford) Perry, Colin Campbell, Belva (Halliday) Day, D.O. Nickle.

For many grads, it was the first chance to meet a man very important to Queen's—the Hon. Jack McNie, Ontario Minister of Colleges and Universities (left). With Chancellor J.B. Stirling looking on, he cut the ribbon to formally open the Bruce Wing of Miller Hall, containing the Hawley Laboratories. Also on campus to address geology and mining grads was the Hon. Donald S. MacDonald, Federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

SCIENCE '33 whooped it up at half-time in the McMaster-Queen's game, sporting a wild variety of headgear and great yellow umbrellas. About 35 percent of the class turned up to mark their 40th anniversary, including A.E. Pugsley from South Africa.

A fair trial for some 'irregular' students

The Faculty of Law has registered 10 'special category' students who would not have been accepted according to the regular assessment, which is based primarily on an applicant's previous academic record.

Prof. Gail Brent, chairman of the Admissions Committee, admits that this 'special category' project is experimental and that the criteria for selecting candidates are still vague. However, in recent years there had been a growing belief among the faculty members that potentially fine lawyers were being passed over because of irregularities in academic records, age factors, absence from a university environment for many years, or educational disadvantages.

Some incentive to initiate a special admissions program at Queen's came through the Law Faculty's informal contact with the University of Saskatchewan's Law School, which offers a summer pre-law program for native peoples, funded by the Department of Justice. The success of a student in this program is considered an indication of ability to handle the level of work in Queen's Faculty of Law.

Each of the special students registered was considered "non-competitive" as far as regular admissions standards were concerned. Although their academic records were de-emphasized in favour of aptitude, all of them have some university background and everyone had to take the Law School Admission Test administered internationally by the Educational Testing Service. All the special students must take the regular courses, be graded with their classmates and fulfill the same requirements. Faculty advisors are available if problems of adjustment arise.

"Queen's Faculty of Law has always been flexible in dealing with mature students," says Professor Brent, "and there has always been initiative shown by applicants who didn't fit the normal pattern." Her committee has revised its admissions procedure so that applicants may request a 'Supplementary Information Form' which encourages them to volunteer confidential references and an autobiographical essay pointing out anything they feel would bolster their argument for admission.

"We've tried to be as objective as possible in a fairly subjective situation," says the Admissions chairman, "and we believe we can recognize a special case when we see one."

A second-year requirement is Moot Court, modelled on Ontario Court of Appeal cases. Video camera is for replays of student lawyers' performances. Substitute judge is Dean's assistant, Prof. R.W. MacKenzie.

'Jason A. Hannah Chair' presented to Queen's in honour of pioneering medical graduate Associated Medical Services, Inc., has presented Queen's with a gift of $250,000 to endow "The Jason A. Hannah Chair in the History of Medical and Related Sciences." The chair is named for the pioneering founder of Associated Medical Services (AMS), a distinguished Queen's graduate whose ties with the University have been firm for more than half a century.

Dr. Jason Albert Hannah, a graduate of Arts '26 and Medicine '28, was active in the Alma Mater Society when a student at Queen's and is still actively involved, at the age of 74, as a member of the Board of Trustees and the University Council.

The Hannah Chair was presented to Queen's at the October meeting of the Board of Trustees. Initially, the gift is a grant of $50,000 per year for five years, beginning with the date of appointment and commencement of duties of the Professor to direct it. The Jason A. Hannah Professor will also co-operate in the establishment of an inter-university Institute for Research into and the Study of the History of Medical and Related Sciences. The grant calls for Queen's to institute a program in this field and make it available to all students in the University, with preference given to medical students if the program is over-subscribed.

While in Kingston to present the Chair, Dr. Hannah, who is President and Managing Director of Associated Medical Services, also made a formal presentation to the Douglas Library of a collection of rare medical books, some of them going back to the 17th Century. The collection was made as part of what Dr. Hannah calls his "third career."

After graduating in Medicine, he began pursuing his lifelong specialization—neuropathology. He was the Richardson Fellow in Pathology, 1928-29, under Prof. James Miller at Queen's and the George Christian Hoffman Fellow in Pathology, 1929-30. The latter fellowship was spent in the Royal Asylum's Laboratory in Edinburgh under Prof. F.E. Reynolds, learning Capal and Del Rio Hortago's gold and silver precipitation methods to demonstrate the elements of the nervous system. On his return to Canada, he was appointed neuropathologist to the Province of Ontario (1930-37) and concurrently Research Fellow in the Banting Institute, Toronto. In 1936 he won world recognition when he was awarded a Silver Medal for Originality in Research, due to his work on the structural changes underlying mental diseases.

That same year, following his observations during the period of 1930 to 1936 of the effects of doctor and hospital bills on lower and middle-class incomes, plus serious study of medical economics, Dr. Hannah secured the approval of the Ontario Medical Association for a concept he called “prepayment for the cost of medical care.” Associated Medical Services was established as a non-profit and non-share corporation, and his second career was launched.

When the Province of Ontario entered the medical insurance business in 1969, Dr. Hannah began winding down a multi-million-dollar enterprise and winding up his newest project—or his “third career.” Believing that the historical and philosophical background of his profession was not well enough known to doctors themselves, or to the public, he began searching out literature on the subject. In 1971 he arranged the shipment to Canada of 2,228 volumes and folios from the library of the Medical Society of London, England.

The purchase was funded by AMS and was called “The Jason A. Hannah Rare Book Collection.” These publications will be the core of the proposed Institute for the history of medical and related sciences. The four volumes presented to Queen’s are from Dr. Hannah’s personal collection. Three are British and one is American. The earliest dates back to 1694 and the “newest” is 125 years old. One covers the work of Richard Bright, after whom diseases of the kidney were named. It was published in 1827 under the title of Reports of Medical Cases Selected with a View of Illustrating the Symptoms and Care of Disease by a Reference to Morbid Anatomy. Dr. Hannah’s gift to Queen’s is one of 28 known extant copies. Two of the gift books were written by Oliver Goldsmith while he was still practising medicine and before he became a famous poet. The fourth is an American Lexicon of Medical Terms by Robley Dunglison.

“Doctors,” says Dr. Hannah, “could make their lives more productive and interesting if they were brought into closer contact with their predecessors. This would also do much to restore and improve the image of my profession. I am especially happy that Associated Medical Services took the first major step in this direction with this gift to my Alma Mater.”

Other Gifts and Bequests

In the past few months, the University has been the grateful recipient of several substantial gifts and bequests, in addition to the Jason A. Hannah Chair. Those acknowledged by the Board of Trustees recently are as follows:

- Florence Marston Holland and Arthur Andrew Holland Bequest — $235,000 for the use of the Faculty of Applied Science, on the recommendation of the Dean. Mr. Holland was a graduate of Science '10.
- A bequest from Dr. Otto Van Luven, M.B. '15, M.D. '21, of $32,000 for Queen’s Capital Program.
- Another gift of art from Dr. Alfred Bader, B.Sc. '45, B.A. '46, M.Sc. '47 — $5,500 for a 14th Century stone statue of St. Catherine for the permanent collection of the Agnes Etherington Art Centre.
- A grant of $7,500 from the Canadian National Sportsmen’s Show for a “predator-proof” fence and pond at the Vivarium, to house Snow Geese used in a conservation project by Prof. Fred Cooke.
- Simon McNally Bursary in Civil Engineering ($10,000).

CHANCELLOR STIRLING'S 20,000th GRAD

Perry Rand Dyck, who received his Ph.D. in Political Studies during the Fall Convocation for graduate students on October 19, was the 20,000th student to be awarded a degree since Dr. J. B. Stirling became Chancellor in 1960. When Spring Convocations roll around, Dr. Stirling will have been succeeded by the Rt. Hon. Roland Michener, soon to step down as Canada's Governor General. The Fall Convocation was addressed by atomic energy specialist, Dr. Bennett W. Lewis, recently appointed Distinguished Professor of Science at Queen's.

News from auditors not too bad for '72-'73

The financial report to the Board of Trustees for the year ending April 30 shows an actual deficit of $46,000 for 1972-73—virtually a balanced budget.

Total expenditures amounted to $55.5 million for the operating budget and ancillary operations, capital and research combined. Direct comparisons with the previous year's figure are not possible; the 1971-72 audit covered only 10 months, following the Ontario Government's request in 1972 to change the fiscal year-end to April 30.

New grants not enough

The Government of Ontario, which makes grants to the province's universities according to a formula, has raised the Basic Income Unit (BIU) for the academic year 1974-75 to $1,916, an increase of 4.99 percent over the current year's $1,825. Since the increase does not reflect the rate of inflation, the result will be a further drain on the real resources of Queen's.

Honours for engineers

Several honours have come to Queen's engineering students in recent months. Pertti Ratty, Sc. '73, was awarded first prize in the American Society of Mechanical Engineers Design Problem Contest for his design of a "Little League Baseball Pitching Machine." He designed the machine as his final-year project in machine design.

Six students from the Department of Mining Engineering were among the 11 winners in the latest essay contest sponsored by the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy (CIMM). Both prizes in the graduate competition went to Queen's-men: Robert W. Gartshore, B.Sc. '70, M.Sc. '72, and James C.P. Lim, M.Sc. '72. Undergraduate winners were Douglas F. Hambly, D. Bruce Stewart, John R. O'Shaughnessy and J. Lyall Workman.

Though it is not unusual for one university's submissions to win as many as six CIMM awards, it is rare that so many prizes are won by students in one department.

New program in Art Conservation first and only one in Canada

Within months, the Canadian government will no longer have to track down and hire experts from other nations to evaluate and maintain its works of art. A Master's degree program in Art Conservation (M.A.C.), the only one in Canada, is developing quickly at Queen's and will enrol its first students next fall.

The 24-month program will graduate experts in the examination, restoration and conservation of works of art. Prerequisites will be honours degrees in Art History, Archaeology, Fine Arts or Art Education. Some knowledge of sciences, particularly chemistry, will be useful.

The National Museums Corporation (under the Secretary of State) has granted Queen's a total of $539,000 to support the program, and $423,000 of it is earmarked for the provision of physical quarters. Vice-Principal George Harrower (Academic) and a Users Committee are looking at expansion of the Agnes Etherington Art Centre southwards to provide more exhibition and storage space, as well as accommodation for the new M.A.C. program. Once the Music Centre is completed, the result would be a row of buildings along Queen's Crescent dedicated to the fine arts—probably with a centralized student centre/lounge area. Also under consideration is the closing of Queen's Crescent to vehicular traffic between University Ave. and Lower Albert St.

Once the program and its physical environment become realities, Prof.

Ian Hodkinson of Art History, a prime mover of the M.A.C. scheme, says the employment opportunity for graduates will be almost limitless. There is a world-wide shortage of art conservationists, he says, and many of the world's treasures are in danger of damage or loss because of it. The National Museums Corporation, whose supportive grants are an indicator of the government's regard for the University's Art Centre, anticipates a need for about 200 experts in its own area in the near future.

Prof. Ian Hodkinson, a prime mover of the M.A.C. program, is shown working at a hot vacuum table he designed and built for restoring damaged paintings. Heat and vacuum pressure press a new lining on the back of fragile, older canvases—in this case the portrait of Dr. W.L. Goodwin which now graces the foyer of Goodwin Hall.

Gift of Artsci '75

Above is the symbol of the Arts and Science Class of '75. Concerned about keeping a green campus, the class decided to make nearly mature trees—mostly evergreens—their graduation present to the University. Planting sites will be chosen in consultation with the Campus Planner.

Funds for the project come chiefly through the sale of lapel buttons bearing the symbol in bright green. The committee was gratified by the booming sales to both graduates and students during Reunion Weekend: about $1200 was raised through the sale of 3,000 buttons.

Change Terms Of Award

The Marty Memorial Scholarship Committee held a special meeting this fall to consider the purpose and terms of reference of the scholarship. It was generally agreed that the terms of reference, while broad in principle, could be interpreted with even more flexibility. This has been reflected in revisions to the application form and advertisement for the scholarship. (See page 191.)

Canada Steamship Lines presents early records to Archives

A significant chapter in the romance of Canadian transportation has been written with the presentation of Canada Steamship Lines' 19th Century records to the Archives of Queen's University. The handing-over ceremony in Montreal on November 5 celebrated both CSL's Diamond Jubilee and the Tercentenary of Kingston, once the centre of shipping in Upper Canada.

CSL President Louis Desmarais formally presented the material to Queen's Vice-Principal James M. Courtright (Development and Information) and Archivist Ian E. Wilson.

Awakened interest in the company's past was prompted largely by its 60th anniversary this year. The gift to Queen's includes 250 shelf feet of records prior to 1913, the year CSL was formed through the amalgamation of a number of smaller steamship and shipbuilding companies. Now that these important documents have been opened to research for the first time, the firm is appealing to its employees to search out other material which may be lying forgotten in corners of various branch offices. The earliest surviving records found so far are those of La Société de Navigation du Rivièr Richelieu, dating from the 1840's. Records of local lines include those of the Thousand Islands Navigation Co. and researchers turned up the minute book of the Kingston Drydock Co. from 1891 onwards.

"This collection means a great deal to Queen's," says Ian Wilson. "Despite the prime importance of water transportation in the economic development of 19th century Canada, virtually none of these records had been available for serious research." (In fact, at one stage CSL believed that its early records had been destroyed in a 1960's fire.)

"There is also a vital tie between Kingston and these records," Wilson adds. "While Kingston now sits to one side of the stream of Seaway traffic, from 1673 until the present century the King's Town was the main transhipment point and port for St. Lawrence River and Great Lakes shipping.

"Once it is sorted, arranged and described, this collection from Canada Steamship Lines will have tremendous significance for students in history, economics and geography—and will certainly attract scholars from across Canada to do research at Queen's."

Association formed to link Queen's with non-graduate parents

A Parents Association has been formed to promote closer relations between the University and the many parents who are not graduates of Queen's. Chairman of the new group is John M. Cape, MBE, ED, MEIC, chairman and chief executive officer of E.G.M. Cape and Co. Ltd., Montreal. He spent his student days at McGill University and Royal Military College. His daughter Susan attends Queen's and is in her final year in the Art History program. The Cape family's long-time interest in Queen's has been fostered through their friendship with the University's retiring Chancellor, Dr. J.B. Stirling, who has been with E.G.M. Cape for 58 years and is now honorary chairman of the firm.

"Though not a Queen's man myself," Mr. Cape wrote to other parents recently, "I admire the University's common-sense approach and its constructive attitude to the changes of our time." He expects the new association will become a vital force "in much the same way as the Alumni Association is an integral part of Queen's," and that members will contribute their views on particular matters concerning the University's operation.

More than 1,200 first-year students registered this fall—nine out of ten from outside the Kingston area. To help their parents establish more effective liaison with a university that must seem baffling and complex to anyone who has not attended Queen's, the secretariat of the Parents Association is centrally located in the Office of the Vice-Principal (Development and Information).

Letters

Parkhill, Ont.

Mr. Editor:

The recent issue of the Queen's Review raised a question in my mind. Somewhere or other I got the idea that the last two words of the Queen's yell were a tribute to Principal Grant. The war cry of the Clan Grant is Cha Gheill, Craigellachie!

The last word in the battle cry is perpetuated in the name of the place in the mountains of British Columbia where Sir Donald Smith, later Lord Strathcona, drove the last spike of the Canadian Pacific. Was Smith a member of a sept of the Clan Grant? Did he want to memorialize the war cry of his clan and to suggest that the Railway had never yielded to the enemies it faced?

I have no way of checking either of these theories. Perhaps someone in the Douglas Library would care to chase them down. One approach would be to check with the National Library in Edinburgh or, if his name can be found, with the present head of the clan. Prof. Charles W. Dunn, who was on the staff in English at the University of Toronto, might be able to help.

Once when I was there I checked the precise meaning of the words of the Queen's yell in a Gaelic dictionary. The first two words literally mean "school-house." I have seen the word thigh with some additional words meaning "summer" attached to more than one summer cottage. Presumably Gaelic had no word for university. Na is, of course, the Gaelic for "of" and Ban Righ is for "High Queen" or possibly for "Queen High," I forget. By using some poetic licence, one can transfer the Gaelic for "high" to the front of the sentence so that in English the words become "High Schoolhouse," or even "the High Seat of Learning."

Mr. Editor:

There were two errors in my article on James Douglas on pages 132-134 of the Review for September-October, which were not in the original text:

On page 134, column two, the reference to Dr. W.R. Graham should have read: "The Douglas Professorship of Canadian History has been held since 1968 by Dr. W.R. Graham." Farther on in the same column, the reference to the laying of the cornerstone of the library on May 9, 1923, should read "Walter Douglas, one of his two sons."

At the Branches

Pre-Game Lunch and Other Toronto Happenings

From noon till game time, Toronto Alumni and Alumnae worked hard at getting in shape to cheer on the Gaels in their battle against "the dreaded Blues" on October 20. They were joined by the Queen's bands and cheerleaders for a colourful lunch at the Drill Hall on St. George St. This pre-game get-together is becoming a Toronto tradition, but it's to be hoped that the outcome of the 1973 game won't! Children under 12 were free (adults $1.75 per person), and Peter Hayden reports that "apparently a group of hungry 11-year-olds ate up all the profit on the event." The luncheon was run by Cathy Segsworth and David Purcell.

Mr. Hayden goes on to say: "On November 4, the Branch held a pleasant sherry party at the home of Roslyn Stollery on Inglewood Drive. The William Mara Co. generously supplied complimentary Sandeman sherry for the occasion."

Unfortunately for the Toronto Branch, Molson's Brewery has cancelled the traditional Molson's luncheon this year. "Inquiries are being made," says Peter Hayden, "to see if a new brewery luncheon can be established."

"By the time you read this," he adds, "Bruce McDougall and Cathy Patterson will have brought another successful evening of ski movies and advice to Toronto alumni and alumnae—for which we thank them."

Queen's Country Supper Big Draw in Ottawa

The Ottawa Branch's Country Supper has gained such a reputation that tickets had to be limited to 200 and reserved well in advance this year. A home-cooked turkey supper was served in the village of Osgoode's Community Centre on October 20 and was followed by a foot-stomping hoedown under the direction of Bob Cathcart.

Country-Style for Kingston

Inspired by Ottawa, the Kingston Branch tried its first Country Supper and Dance on November 16, in the village of Verona. A capacity crowd of 100, dressed for square dancing, enjoyed a turkey supper followed by a hoe-down led by Sandy Sanderson.

Fall Fling in Hamilton

On November 10, the Hamilton area grads staged a Fall Fling at Burlington's Estaminet on the lakeshore. Happy hour began at 7.00, followed by a beef and seafood smorgasbord at 8.00 and dancing till all hours.

Big Day for Branches

Saturday, November 3, must have had "good vibes," because three Branches chose that date for special events. One was the annual Coffee Party of the Ottawa Alumnae Branch, held this year at the home of Mrs. Hewson I. Kellam, with Miss Florence Rivington as convenor. Besides providing an opportunity to renew old friendships, this party is traditionally a "money shower" as well. Last year the Ottawa ladies sent $300 to the General Alumnae for the Bursary Fund.

In Montreal, November 3 brought an Alumni Cocktail Party at the Westmount home of Mr. and Mrs. K.S. (Ken and Pat) Clark. Organizers included Andy Johnston, Janet Potter, Shirley Cohen, Doug MacLean and Barbara Rogers. The graduates were joined at the party by several non-alumni friends of Queen's.

The Calgary Branch chose November 3 for its Annual Dinner Meeting and held it in the Fireplace Lounge of the University of Calgary's Dining Centre. Following cocktails, dinner, and the election of officers, Dr. Ernie Johnson showed slides and spoke of his recent eye-saving mission to India and Bangladesh.

Emeritus Professor of Spanish and Italian Languages and Literatures, Dr. J.H. Brovedani, D. ès L. (Rennes), died at Tolmezzo, Udine, Italy, on September 9. He was 89 years of age.

He came to Queen's in 1914 as a lecturer in French. He was equally at home in French, Spanish, and Italian. When he retired he was head of the Department of Spanish.

Professor Brovedani, "a linguist of exceptional versatility, brought to Queen's modern methods of language teaching," wrote a colleague. Good-humouredly at ease in the lecture room, he spoke freely and with great enthusiasm on ancient and modern Spanish authors, seldom having recourse to notes or the blackboard. All his life he had been a great traveller; he knew well not only Spain, but also Spanish America from Mexico to Patagonia.

Although 24 years have elapsed since he retired, he was very much in the memory of those who had studied under him. Many and frequent were the enquiries about "Brovi," right up until the time of his death.

PROF. MURDOCH MATHESON

A pioneer in education in Western Canada and Professor Emeritus of the University of Saskatchewan, Murdoch Matheson, B.A. '07, Ed. '09, died at Saskatoon, Sask., August 28, at the age of 92.

Professor Matheson began his career as a teacher in the West while still a student. He moved to Saskatchewan permanently in 1910 and grew up with the Province. In Omega and Assiniboia he organized the local schools, from primary to matriculation. After one year at the new Normal School in Moose Jaw, he joined the Faculty of the University of Saskatchewan in the Department of English, where he remained from 1928 to 1946.

Dr. Norman Miller once wrote of Professor Matheson: "If success is measured in financial returns, then there is grave question whether a career of teaching in Saskatchewan during two world wars and a great depression was a success. If, however, a different yardstick is used—that of influence on and contribution to the educational life of the West—then this is indeed a success story."

An Invitation to FRIENDS, RELATIVES, COLLEAGUES AND FORMER STUDENTS OF PROF. GLEN SHORTLIFFE

Several years ago, the Centre for French Area Studies, in which Prof. Glen Shortliffe was very active, planned an interdisciplinary conference to commemorate the centenary of the Paris Commune of 1871, an event in which Dr. Shortliffe had always taken a keen interest. He did not live to see the conference come about, but it was dedicated to his memory.

Delegates from dozens of universities heard provocative papers by experts in a variety of fields — from Canada, the United States, England and France. Now the Centre for French Area Studies plans to publish the proceedings of this meeting and dedicate the book to Glen Shortliffe. The proposed book would be a handsome one, with eleven articles and more than 100 illustrations. It would also be expensive to produce.

Since Glen Shortliffe was one of Queen's outstanding teachers for so many years, the Centre thought that many of his former students might wish to join others in making this memorial publication a reality. Contributions (and inquiries) may be directed to Prof. James A. Leith, Department of History, Queen's University.

Dr. Matthew Kuhn, Sc. '62 (M.A.Sc., Ph.D., Waterloo), has recently moved from Bell Laboratory, Murray Hill, N.J., to Bell Northern Research Ltd., Ottawa, Ont., as manager of new technology development. Dr. and Mrs. Kuhn live in Manotick, Ont.
